OLSON ASSERTS WIFE HYPNOTIZED BY HIS VICTIM

College Professor Pleads Unwritten Law in Defense for Slaying Laundry Driver Darling Who Exercised Hypnotic Control Over Woman

"Superhuman Influence" Exerted Which Led to Murder of Destroyer of His Home by Ol- en

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 4.—Engaging in a bloody encounter with the police and trampling down women and children, a mob stormed the courtroom here today in a rush for seats to witness the trial of Professor Oscar Olson, who shot and killed Clyde Darling, a laundry wagon driver, after the latter, it is alleged, stole Mrs. Olson's affections.

Mrs. Olson is expected to testify today that her husband slew Darling after she confessed illicit relations with Darling.

Olson resumed his testimony today. He said that on the night of the tragedy he told the police it was a case of "the unwritten law." County Attorney O'Brien cross examined the witness, and Olson stammering, recited his wife's confession.

Olson is a member of the University of Minnesota faculty.

Hypnotic Influence.

That Darling held Mrs. Olson under a hypnotic spell was testified to by Professor Olson. O'Brien forced Olson to go into the details of the intimacy between his wife and Darling and fairly wrung the testimony from the witness.

In his testimony Olson declared his wife once said to him:

"Darling would hold me in his arms and gaze into my eyes until he had me in his control. His mind mastered mine. He hypnotized me. He hypnotized me. He looked at me until I felt my will swaying and my moral hold loosening. I can deny him nothing. I feel in mortal terror of him."

Olson stated that his wife did not tell him of Darling's threats at that time, but he went to the "Capital Laundry and warned Darling to stay away from his home."

Feared Vengeance.

Later, fearing Darling's vengeance, he bought a revolver, and concealed it in his home. Then his wife told him of Darling's threats, saying: "He says he will kill you if he cannot have me."

Olson described his efforts to get another position in another university and leave Minnesota in order to take his wife away from what he termed "the superhuman influence" exercised over her by Darling. He told of the state of terror in his home thereafter and how he and his wife constantly discussed their troubles. He said a horse passing the house would arouse a fear of death in their hearts and the slam of a door would startle them like a pistol shot. The witness is on the verge of collapse and Mrs. Olson is also evidently breaking down.
