MORE CARS SOLD IN SMALLER TOWNS

It is estimated by automobile marketing authorities that the people living outside the large centers of population will buy the big majority of the motor car output this year. This particularly applies to Oregon, where the rural population has attained that state of wealth where its thoughts turn toward pleasure and social advancement. Since the farmers and the well-to-do residents of the smaller towns and cities in Oregon will buy hundreds of automobiles during 1913, it is well that they should have some data to base their judgment when they are selecting their cars. Farmers probably are the "hardest customers," in one sense, that the automobile salesman has to deal with. Frugal and thrifty, they have gathered their fortune by hard work and conscientious effort, and they part with their money only after the closest investigation and after being thoroughly convinced that they are getting the best they can buy. Chalmers automobiles are popular in the country. Not merely because they represent the highest development in beauty of finish, but because they are strong, economically operated and stand well the severe strain the motor car generally is put to in country use. It is infrequent, indeed, that you find a dissatisfied Chalmers owner in the country. The cars—every one of them—are built of the finest material on the market. "There is a noticeable tendency on the part of the country buyers in Oregon to purchase high grade cars this year," said Perry L. Ashcraft, Jr., the Chalmers representative. "They have gotten by that stage where they think it is economy to buy a cheap car. The experiences of their friends have taught them the folly of this. They realize now that they get better dollar for dollar value by buying the car that is made of the best material obtainable. "I can distinctly remember the time when it was virtually impossible to sell a $2000 automobile in the country. That day has passed for good. It is comparatively easy now to show the people the value of a car like the Chalmers. They appreciate that when getting an automobile like this they are not buying for the immediate present, but are purchasing something that will be just as good 10 years later and will give fine service after it has long since paid for itself. "Automobile building has changed remarkably. The demand used to be so great that the manufacturer was not forced to build particularly good. He could sort of throw the car together and let it go at that. You see they didn't think much of the automobile and it wasn't supposed to last a terribly long time. Now they want a motor car that will give good service indefinitely. That is why they are buying cars like the Chalmers. "Automobiles of this class are built for permanency. The builders are playing for future business. In years to come, they want the business of the man that buys their cars this season. That is why each car is built under personal supervision. Each car is thoroughly tested before it is sent from the factory. "Buyers find that this is the type of automobile that pays in the long run." Mail Tribune's classified ads bring results.
