OKLAHOMA RANCH REAL WILD WEST SHOW IN TOWN

This sure is "Circus Day" and a real wild west show is in town. The troupe arrived in town this morning while the town was in peaceful slumber. The tents were up and everything was in working order in due time to give the big advertised street parade, and it was a great surprise to the public to see the turnout of pretty cowgirls on real neat looking western cow range outfits. The gallant street parade was just as good, big and pretty as it was advertised to be. All the wagons were newly painted with brilliant colors.

The real western cowboys with their wide brim hats, high top boots and shaps were a very pretty sight to look upon.

The Indians with their war paint, feathers and pretty colored blankets were carried upon the bare backs of the little Indian ponies. The Indian squaws and their papooses were seated around a tepee upon one of the wagons.

Besides the cowboys, cowgirls and Indians were Russian Cossacks dressed in their native costumes of war seated upon high perched saddles such as are used in the Russian army. The use of the high saddle is to enable them to stand while riding in order to give them more chance to use their sabers on either side of the horse while in battle.

Then came the old time stage coach which brings back memories of the days before railroad or telephone when the stage coach was the only means of getting from one town to another and also of the stories you have read about the Indians attacking them while making one of these trips.

After all of these features came the old prairie schooner with its hoop top and drawn by two pair of oxen.

The feature of the show and feature of the country at the present time was well represented in the parade. That was the wonderful, dare devil game of auto polo.

The fun making clowns were to be found at any part of the street scene and last but not least was that which you will find following every circus aggregation, the callopie, playing all the latest popular songs of the day. Taking the street exhibition all in all it was very neat and made a very good impression upon the folks who saw it.

The matinee performance was given at the regular time and opened with the band marching while the company followed on horseback.

The first act presented was fancy and trick roping by the cowboys and cowgirls in which act Mr. Homer Wilson makes the wonderful catches of eight horses running abreast with one rope and four horses running in different directions with two.

The Misses Mulhall and Holmes do some very clever rope spinning and catches.

Otto Kline, the world's champion trick and fancy rider having won his title at the stampee at Calgary, Canada, in 1912, is doing some wonderful stunts upon the horse while going at its fastest speed.

Jack Goldberg is very clever and fast in the act of the pony express, jumping from one horse to another without stopping to mount the steed.

The bulldozing of long horned steers is done very well by Lane Jordan, an act which at any time Mr. Jordan is likely to be killed.

Then the bucking bronchos saddled and rode by the broncho busters with
