

THAW DEPORTED; RE-ARRESTED IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

Cabinet Official Orders His Deportation and He Is Secretly Rushed to Border and Put Across—Hires Auto and Starts East.

Move a Sudden One and Surprise to Both Prisoner and Those Seeking His Return to Asylum.

COLEBROOK, N. H., Sept. 10.—Captured by New Hampshire authorities seven miles from Stewartstown this state, while he was fleeing eastward for freedom, Harry K. Thaw is again a prisoner here today and will be held for extradition by the New York authorities. William Travers Jerome and Special Deputy Attorney General Kennedy of New York are en route here by automobile from Bennington. Jerome will lose no time in attempting to get Thaw again to Mattewan.

Thaw who was carried across the border today by Canadian immigration men and set free at Averill, Vermont, lost no time in getting away to the eastward. Soon after he passed through Stewartstown, Sheriff Drew and Bernard Jacobs, a New York attorney, hit his trail. How the arrest was made was told here by Jacobs. He said:

Arrested by Sheriff
"Sheriff Drew and I arrested Thaw seven miles from Stewartstown. He made no resistance whatever. We will hold him for the New York authorities. I was looking out for the interests of New York state."

"When we heard Thaw was in New Hampshire the sheriff and I auto-mobiled here and left about 11 o'clock. About seven miles from Stewartstown we stopped at a school house and asked if anyone had seen the automobile in which Thaw was fleeing. While we were there Thaw's machine approached. We saw him coming and signalled for him to stop when the sheriff told Harry he was under arrest as a fugitive from justice."

"All right," said Thaw. "I am ready to accompany you but I want to employ counsel."

"All right," said the sheriff. "We will see that you have counsel. I will take you to a lawyer when we reach Colebrook."

Thaw Takes It Calmly
"Thaw was as cool as could be and showed no sign of excitement. He seemed willing to accompany us. The sheriff ordered him to leave his car and enter ours. He did this and ordered his chauffeur to return to Averill. On the return to this city Thaw did not talk, although he seemed perfectly calm. I told him I represented New York state and we took him at once to the office of C. P. Johnson, whom he engaged as his attorney."

"Thaw at once conferred with Mr. Johnson and arranged to have his friends and relatives notified of his arrest. The sheriff still is with him and will not let him out of his sight until Mr. Jerome arrives here. Thaw seemed in good condition. He had a suitcase and wore a big winter overcoat when we caught him."

Loafed in Village
Thaw said here today that he stopped fifteen minutes in Stewartstown and walked about the village square there without any effort here.

The great airship was struck by the terrific gusts almost a midships and hurled to the surface of the sea, where she was pounded to pieces by the wind and the waves.

This was the fifth aircraft built by Count Zeppelin to be destroyed but no loss of life occurred in the other mishaps. Zeppelin was deeply affected by the tragedy.

Kaiser Wilhelm telegraphed his condolences to the families of the victims.

"Harry has too many lawyers. I do not love him as I once did, but I have a deep affection for him. Harry will realize this some day and come to me to help him. There are many ways I could help him, as I have done before."

Asked if she were sorry for Thaw's mother, Evelyn said: "Not at all. She is nothing to me. As soon as Harry realizes the mistaken course he is taking in trying to secure his freedom, I am sure he will turn to me. I got out of the first mess and I can extricate him from this predicament. All reports that I am afraid of Harry are false. I am not afraid."
