A MYSTERIOUS MAN.

From a Thread or so a Very Eye-Catching Yarn may be Spun.

One cold morning nineteen years ago, as the hack rolled into the German colony of Wartburg, Tenn., a stranger stepped out, and, carrying on his shoulder a square box and valise, approached the inn of the place and asked for board and lodging. He was eyed suspiciously on account of his rough appearance, scant baggage and nervous manner. He was taken in and given a room. When he got inside he locked the door securely and fastened the window shutters. What he did in the room and what he came there for has not been revealed to the people until a stranger came through the place a few days ago, after nineteen years of companionship with him. He occupied the room and always locked it, carrying the keys with him. After being with the people some time he was asked to participate in their pleasures and assemblies. He gave his name as Sinclair and would entertain them with marvelous tales of travel and adventures, claiming to have been a sea captain. He soon became a great favorite with the people, but his mysterious ways and manners kept them away from him somewhat. He was of a nervous temperament and was always watching for some one. When the hack would arrive he would always leave the crowd until it had gone and the passengers housed. His dress was of the coarsest material. He wore his beard long and a large hat with a brim down over his eyes. The village gradually grew larger and new arrivals were made daily. His anxiety increased and he began to lead the life of a recluse, and when he came out would always listen and never utter a word.

One of his peculiarities was to always leave a party that began to discuss the war. One day he became almost crazy with fear and seemed to be searching for something he had lost. He was seen to have dropped a paper, which was picked up. In it was contained the account of the assassination of Lincoln by Booth. When he was asked what it was he had lost he replied something that interested him as much as his life. The paper was afterward slipped near his door. When he discovered it the shock made him ill. He took to his bed and was delirious for several days. In his room was the square box he had been seen to bring with him. It was a desk. Of this he raved in his wild delirium and stated that in the drawers were disclosures that would astonish the whole country, but the keys were tried around his neck. He called the names of Spangler, Harold, Atzerott, Payne and Mudd, and said his name was Booth. When he got well and was told of his wild talks he was startled and denied ever having said such words. He lived afterward in the same mysterious manner until one day last week, when a gentleman from Fredericksburg, Va., was passing through the mountains with a party inspecting the coal deposits and stopped at the hotel. Sinclair was walking across the street when the wind blew his hat off.

The gentleman who was standing at a window uttered an exclamation and said: "Heavens! can that be Erastus Booth, the brother of J. Wilkes Booth? The last time I saw him was nineteen years ago in Washington, during the excitement of the assassination of Lincoln." The people gathered around to hear his story of the last time he saw him, and to tell of his mysterious coming nineteen years ago. After listening to the two narratives the conclusions were that he was the man. The next day, while out walking, Sinclair was passing a party, when one of the number called: "Hello, Booth!" He stopped suddenly, involuntarily turned his head, caught himself and proceeded on his walk. That night he quietly stole away in the darkness with his desk and baggage. His going was as mysterious as his coming. He has not been heard of since.

Medical Item.

Clifton Nickelson, of Waco, Texas, has been studying medicine for several years at New Orleans. He was home on a vacation not long since. His grandmother had a cold in her head, and asked him to give her something, but he neglected to do so.

"That's a pretty howdy do," said the old lady indignantly. "You have been studying medicine for three years, and you can't prescribe for your old grandmother when she has a cold."

"O, I can prescribe for you just the same as if I had graduated, if that's all you want; but it ain't going to do you any good."

It is estimated that the total expense incurred in the Inaugural celebration amounts to $45,000. Imagine Jefferson, after riding up to the Capitol on horseback, slinging the bridle over a paling and walking in to be inaugurated, viewing in his simplicity a bill of expenses footing up $45,000.

The ten plagues of a newspaper office are bores, poets, cranks, rats, cockroaches, typographical errors, exchange fiends, book canvassers, delinquent subscribers, and the man who always knows how to run the paper better than the editor does himself.

It is a very easy thing, even for the most ignorant man, to be an author of note if his name is worth anything.

"A man who never knows," says a writer, "when an idea is going to strike him." The same is true of icicles.

As a title can now be bought in Europe for $500 there is no reason why any more American heiresses should marry organ grinders.

"Is Mrs. Blank a very cold woman?"

"I don't know; why do you ask?"

"Oh, because she always has an 'I see' air about her."

Crabb Robinson says that Goethe never had an affliction which he did not turn into a poem. Some writers never have a poem which they do not turn into an affliction.

In Ceylon, the promise held out to women to be good and act pretty, is that in the happy hereafter they will become men. No wonder the Ceylon women are not remarkable for sweetness of temper.

Æsthetic philosophical lecturer to his hearers: "People deride skepticism. Can you tell me what skepticism is?" Unterrified optimist, with idiotic literalness: "I suppose it is denying a truth that you don't believe in favor of a lie that you can't believe."

"Yes," said pretty Miss Snooks, as she came home from a party at 5 A. M., "I was determined to be the last to leave. I hate that horrid Mrs. Blinks so I was resolved she shouldn't have the pleasure of slandering me after I'd gone."

Joseph Cook says that in A. D. 2400 the population of the United States will be 3,200,000,000. Those of our readers who contemplate going to the circus that year will do well to purchase tickets at the down-town office and avoid the rush at the wagon.

"Nurse," said a penitent Western miner, as he lay in the hospital after an accident, "I'll never draw a revolver on a man again as long as I live." The nurse expressed her pleasure in this moral resolution, when the patient went on to say: "Guess I'll go for the galoot with a two-scatter shoot-gun."

A Chicago critic revives the old slander that "Henry Irving's legs are poems." They may say what they please about Henry's legs, but, unlike most poems, his feet are all right. —This is another mistake. One of them must be left.

"Papa, didn't you say if I was a good boy you would give me a cent?" queried a 7-year old.

"Yes, my son," blandly replied paterfamilias.

"Well, then," said young hopeful, "couldn't you make it payable in advance?" He got his cent.

"A scientific Frenchman says he has discovered a new process of making artificial brains," said Mrs. Wigglesworth, looking up from the paper she was reading. "Artificial brains!" sniffed Mr. Wiggleworth scornfully; "that's just like those nonsensical Frenchmen, always fooling away their time making something artificial. What I want is real brains—none of your make-believe nonsense." Mrs. Wigglesworth, as she resumed her paper, demurely murmured that she had noticed it, too, but she never should have dared to speak of it herself. And Mr. Wigglesworth rubbed his head in a dazed sort of fashion, and wondered if he really had expressed himself just as he meant to.

Holding the Bride as Security.

One of the most novel marriages in the history of Norwood took place last week. The applicants were a lady and gent of the ebony hue. The young Justice of the Peace, who is very conversant with the law, but a little inexperienced in performing marriage ceremonies, proceeded to unite the happy pair. His face bore marks of excitement, and, in a nervous tone, he bade the two join hands. This they did, joining, however, their left hands, and were made one. The joyous couple, then proceeded to depart, whereupon the following conversation ensued:

J. P. Where's my fee? You didn't expect me to marry you for nothing, did you?

Groom (excitedly) "W'y boss, I ain't got a cent! How much do you charge? I didn't know I had to pay for marryin'."

J. P. "$2.50. I'll just keep your wife here until you go and get the amount." (At the same time bidding the blushing bride to take her seat.)

Groom. "Well, I'll try to get it."

Off he went to procure an order from his employer, but, staying rather long, the bride moved restlessly toward the door.

"Take your seat," was heard in solemn tones from the Justice of the Peace.

She complied, but what her feelings must have been can't be easily described. However, the groom returned in due time, settled the bill and took his "pawned" bride home a wiser if not a better man.

Wasted Sympathy.

Peter Osterhout is one of the most rascally negroes in Galveston. He was caught stealing poultry, and brought up before the justice.

"The evidence," said the judge, "shows that you stole the chickens from Col. Jones' hen coup, and the fine should be five dollars, but I'll let you off this time."

"Who wants ter be let off?" exclaimed the prisoner. "I steals my chickens, and I pays my fine, and don't ask nuffin ob nobody. Dis heah mixing up sentiment and brandy am what's ruinin' de kentry."
