The War Today

Bayonet charges by the Germans in another determined effort to pierce the Allies' centre at Craonne have been repulsed.

Belgium forces, harassing the German right flank, have interfered so with operations against the Allies that heavy artillery has been rushed toward Antwerp to crush the army led by King Albert.

Two million men are engaged in the third important Gallician battle of the war. The Russians, reinforced by fresh troops and encouraged by the evacuation of Jaroslav...

In East Prussia three German army corps (120,000 men), under General Hindenburg, have started an aggressive movement against Russian Poland.

Montenegrin troops seized the town of Rogbitza, 30 miles from Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia, and continued their march to within ten miles of the stronghold.

Berlin War Office reports successful attacks at several points along the line and announces arrival of heavy reinforcements.

London War Office reports the arrival of 100,000 men to save the wavering army of von Kluk, with the Allies continuing their flanking movement.

Vienna admits the evacuation of Jaroslav, which was burned before the army left. The Russians have won several engagements with the rearguard of General Dankl's reinforced army.

Petrograd War Office reports continued success in the Gallician campaign. Grodek, Sambor and Dubiecko already are taken, the capture of the last named clearing the way to an advance westward.

British Admiralty reports both successes and reverses. The Carmania sank an armed German merchantman off South America.

ROMANIA'S ENTRANCE INTO THE WAR ON THE SIDE OF THE ALLIES IS EXPECTED, IT BEING ADMITTED BY GERMAN AUTHORITIES THAT EFFORTS OF THE KAISER TO GAIN AID OF THE BALKAN STATE HAVE BEEN FUTILE.

DASH OF BAYONET CHARGE FOILED AS ALLIES CHECK FOE

Craonne, Near Centre of Long Battle Line, Is Point of Most Desperate Assault; London Reports Von Kluk's Retreat On German Right.

French Occupy Heights of Lassigny, West of Noyon, and Capture Three Towns Near Centre of Battle Line in Campaign.

PARIS, Sept. 21. German forces, in a series of desperate assaults in the region of Craonne, today resorted to the bayonet, but were repulsed by the Allies with considerable loss.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon the War office issued this official statement:

On our left wing, on the right bank of the Oise, we have advanced to the heights of Lassigny (west of Noyon). East of the Oise and to the north of the Aisne the Germans have shown an increase in activity.

At the centre in Champagne and on the west side of the Argonne, beyond Souain, we have taken Messin, Les Hurles and Massiger.

In the Woivre region the enemy holds the region of Thioncourt and has bombarded Harrou-Chateau.

On the right wing (Lorraine and the Vosges) there is no change. The Germans are fortifying themselves on Delmieu Hill, south of Chateau-Salins.

The British troops had taken up positions in the Craonne region, and it is supposed that the forces of Sir John French are bearing the brunt of the attacks made by the German infantry.

Sixteen words constituted an additional official statement issued at Bordeaux this afternoon. It follows:

"We are confident that the Allies hold a favorable position in the great battle now progressing."

Today's announcement is the first since the battle of the Aisne began stating that either side had resorted to the bayonet. This indicates that on this, the ninth day of the battle, the artillery duel which has been raging for many days, resulted in a drawn battle and that the other forces have now been brought into action.

The Allies have thrown forward heavy bodies of men to engage the attacking forces.

Activity of the French and British around Soissons shows that the Allies are continuing their flanking movement against the troops of General von Kluk, who appears in imminent danger of being surrounded.

The French have been able to move their heaviest artillery to the firing line east of the Oise, near its junction with the Aisne, and a continuous night and day bombardment against the German positions is in progress.

The bombardment of Rheims continued today with unabated fury. The heavy German guns, mounted on the heights three miles from the city, are...

knocking down the walls of the principal buildings of the town and many noncombatants have been killed.

Only a few walls of the famous cathedral, erected in the Middle Ages, remain standing.

Both Soissons and Rheims are reported to be in flames. Soissons has been under fire since fighting in the present battle began.

Farther to the east, near the Argonne district, in the Meuse Valley and the Vosges, fighting is less severe, but is still going on.

The destruction along the valley of the Aisne is appalling. Wounded soldiers, returned officers and prisoners from the front describe the loss of life as colossal. The stretch of lowland between the hills flanking the Aisne is described as a valley of death and desolation.

Day and night the bombardment goes on until one wonders in amazement how the Germans are able to bring from their distant base of supplies sufficient ammunition necessary to keep their batteries in action all the time.

It is confidently believed by the French military authorities in Paris that the German positions can be so thoroughly weakened by the cannonade that the French and British will be able to sweep the Germans from their entrenchments at the point of the bayonet, despite the reinforcements.

Already, it is said, the French have been able to silence several of the German batteries at that point, compelling them to take up new positions.

The effect of the German artillery fire upon the French and British troops has been terrible, it is admitted. Some of the heaviest German guns have been shelling the allied positions from a distance of seven miles. All are cleverly masked. It is admitted that one of the largest guns, which has done great damage, is so successfully concealed that the Allies have been unable to locate it.

So far the fighting has been a fierce artillery duel, partaking of the qualities of a siege. Now, however, with both sides beginning to use more and more infantry, the fighting should be near its end.

No matter how the present battle goes, all of northeastern France, from Paris to the Belgian and German frontiers, will have been ravaged, devastated and scourged. It is as though the hands of God, sweeping in divine wrath, had withered and wasted the land for the sins of its people.

The French and English have been successful in taking big bodies of prisoners, but it seems that the gaps in the German ranks are filled as soon as they are made. More than 10,000 prisoners of war now are interned in this city, all having been brought in within the last week.

ONSLAUGHTS OF GERMANS UNCHECKED, BERLIN REPORTS

BERLIN, Sept. 21 (by way of Amsterdam). The following official statement covering the general situation in France was issued today:

"Success is meeting our offensive against the allied British and French forces. We are making progress at several points. Heavy rains for a few days compelled the German troops to withhold their attack, but we are now moving forward with the enemy making an energetic defense.

"The reinforcements sent to the front have given a good account of themselves and have strengthened our line by replacing the soldiers, who were almost exhausted by the terrific strain under which they have been fighting for many days.

"Our artillery again has demonstrated its superiority.

"We have repulsed attacks made by French troops on Donon, near Soissons, in the central Vosges.

"The height of Primont, near Rheims, was taken by assault, the ai-
