"DEATH'S FINAL CONQUEST."

The glories of our birth and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate—
Death lays his icy hand on kings!
Sceptre and crown
Must tumble down!
And in dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some with swords may reap the field;
And plant fresh laurels where they kill;
But their strong nerves at last must yield—
They tame but one another still.
Early or late,
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath,
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

The garlands wither on your brow!
Then boast no more of mighty deeds;
Upon Death's purple altar now,
See where the victor victim bleeds.
All heads must come
To the cold tomb!
Only the actions of the just
Smell sweet and blossom in the dust!

THE DEATH OF MR. DAYTON.

Full Particulars of the Sad Event—His Relations with the French Government—Significant Change in the Tone of the French Press—The Iron-clad 'Shanghai."

PARIS, Friday, December 2, 1864.—A profound sensation was produced in the American colony, this morning, by the news that Mr. Dayton had suddenly died, last evening, in an attack of apoplexy, while paying a visit at the Hotel de Louvre. At the beginning of the year Mr. Dayton had been obliged to take some precautions with his health, on account of symptoms which were supposed to indicate a tendency to apoplexy, but for the last three or four months his health appeared to be all that could be desired, and he seems not to have had any apprehension for the moment of the coming attack. His death occurred at about 9 o'clock in the evening. He complained of sickness; asked to lie down for a moment on the sofa, and almost immediately died. It was at first supposed, however, that he was only sleeping, and it was not till after the lapse of some minutes that it was discovered he had ceased to breathe. His family, who were visiting in another and distant part of the city, did not hear the sad intelligence until two hours after, and the blow was a terrible one indeed. His body will be embalmed, the funeral services will take place on Monday, and he will be carried home by his family for interment in New Jersey.

The loss of Mr. Dayton will be deeply felt by the American residents here; for, by the amenity of his character, his accessibility, and his readiness to protect and farther the interests of his countrymen, he had endeared himself to all; but, more than this, and much more important than this, he had obtained by his dignity, his frankness, and his good taste, such a position with the French Government as enabled him to manage the diplomatic relations between the two countries in a way to give entire satisfaction to his Government. His personal relations with M. Drouyn de Lhuys had grown quite intimate, and there is every reason to believe that a perfect understanding existed between them as to the relations between the two countries.

A few days after the news of the re-election of Mr. Lincoln arrived at Paris, Mr. Dayton carried to M. Drouyn de Lhuys a despatch from Mr. Seward, and held with the French Foreign Minister a long conversation. What the nature of this conversation was we do not know; but since then the tone of the official and semi-official press has been entirely changed. An order has evidently been issued to cease the abuse of Mr. Lincoln and the systematic lying about the Union cause which these papers have been in the habit of indulging in.

The secessionists, naturally uneasy at this marked change in the official and ministerial press, are looking about for an explanation which may serve to disarm it; and they state, among other things, that Mr. Dayton was authorized to assure the French Government that, during the coming term of service of Mr. Lincoln, the same policy of non-intervention in Mexican affairs as that which had marked the present term would be pursued. One paper even ventures the assertion that Mr. Lincoln will not recognize the new Mexican Government, if the Emperor Napoleon would promise his sympathy and moral aid to the Union cause.

But whatever may be the explanations, the fact exists; the journals under the control of the Ministry have changed their tone, and a sorry lot they make of it trying to tell the truth. The Moniteur and Constitutionalist confine themselves to giving the news as it arrives by despatch, without transforming and altering it as heretofore, so as to make it say the exact opposite of what was meant. The France writes confusedly, as if it were a bitter pill to settle down to telling the truth, and it would be difficult for any man to tell, from the Baron de Bazancourt's two last articles, which side he was trying to write on, and almost what he was trying to write about.

The Patrie, a secessionist, but no longer a ministerial paper, is bewildered and strikes out wildly. It says it cannot comprehend the American people, and does not believe they comprehend themselves. What can they mean, it says, by voting by such an immense majority for a man and a policy which are conducting the country to ruin? What is there, it says, in the character of the people which renders them so blind to what we can see with so much facility?

And then it adds, "In our perplexity let us fly to De Tocqueville, and see if, in his 'Democracy in America,' he does not throw light on this strange people and their strange mode of looking at affairs." And then follow quotations from the illustrious writer's book, which are no further than to show that so long ago as the epoch in which De Toqueville visited America, he saw and predicted that so loose a confederation must grow looser, and finally divide into sections—in other words, that he predicted the present civil war.

But, notwithstanding the secession papers have changed their tone in their editorial columns, they continue to publish the outrageous despatches—which despatches are half-column commentaries of the Havas Telegraphic Agency at London and New York, which Agency, as you already know, is, from some cause or other, entirely devoted to the fortunes of the Rebels. This agency, last night, sent us from London a long resume of an article from the Rebel organ, the Index, based on Lord Russell's reply to the manifesto of Messrs. Slidell, Mason, and Mann.

The Havas Agency gives emphasis to the assertion that Mr. Lincoln not having counted any votes from a certain number of the Southern States, that he has therefore forever renounced the control over those States, and that he thus confesses that there is now no dispute between him and the Confederate States, but as to which of the two countries Kentucky, Missouri, and Louisiana shall belong to.

It also lays emphasis on the manner in which Lord Russell spoke of the two sections, the one as the "so-called Confederate States," and the other as "the former United States," and claims that this is a fair striking of the political balance; and that he is thus on the road to a recognition of the South. The Patrie appears to be particularly obliged to Lord John Russell for the phrase "the former United States," and declares that the words will remain.

The Shanghai, one of the vessels built at Nantes for the Confederates, but sold to the Prussian Government is putting in her guns, and will sail for Bremerhaven the 20th of this month. M. Arman, her builder, has just returned from Berlin with his pay in his pocket, and also with a contract for two new vessels for the Prussian Government, but of a different model from the others. The country is deeply indebted to Mr. Dayton for the manner in which he conducted negotiations so as to put a stop to the vessels built for the Confederates in French ports, and also to the building of others for the same destination.

I ought to put on record the success of the tenor Brignoli, on the stage of our Italian opera at Paris—the most difficult stage in the world to succeed on. After his failure at Madrid, for which, however, he was in no way responsible, he appeared here with fear and trembling, and sang, therefore, under great disadvantage. Nevertheless, he was encored throughout on the first night, while on the second night his reception was still more enthusiastic. He appeared extremely awkward and angular in his acting; but this is a peculiarity of his anatomy for which this audience, which only cares for a fine voice and correct singing, will hold of little account.—N. Y. Times.

FROM THE AMERICAN CONSUL AT PARIS.

Extract from a letter from John Bigelow, Esq., American Consul, dated

PARIS, December 6.—My Dear Mr. Weed:—Our friend, Mr. Dayton, died about 10 o'clock this morning, while visiting at the Louvre Hotel. He had called upon Mr. Vanderpool, but not finding him in, went to the apartment of Mrs. Eckles (widow of Judge Eckles), asked for a seat, and soon complained of feeling dizzy. He became alarmed about his symptoms, and [illegible] her son to leave him. He died there upon the sofa, in a very few minutes. His funeral will take place on Tuesday.

This event has spread a cloud over us all. I have been so occupied with preparations for the funeral that I have had a moment to devote to this letter.

NO GHOST.

I don't know how people feel who have seen a ghost; perhaps it would be a relief to them to find that the white garment shrouded a broomstick; but for myself, I once saw a figure in a sheet which it would be an infinite relief to me to believe a ghost. I saw this figure, man or woman I know not, five years ago, when I was lodging in the second floor of a house in Bloomsbury street, and within a few doors of Oxford street. There were at that time unfurnished rooms to be let on the second floor of the opposite house. The blinds were not drawn down, so that before the windows were too dirty I could see into two of those empty rooms. That opposite my own was an inner room lighted by two windows, and entered only from the adjoining small ante-chamber, and this, which also looked into the street, had one window. The great bill, was there for so many months, that it grew yellow with age and grew with dirt, and it was hanging in a hopeless and impotent manner by a single wafer when the rooms were taken; at least I concluded that they were taken, for the bill disappeared altogether, and was not replaced. In the course of a few days the windows were cleaned, and a bed and two chairs were placed in the inner room. There were no curtains and no carpets, nor, so far as I could see, any other furniture in these two rooms. But there was some one in the bed, very ill I imagined, for although I saw the figure move from side to side, I never saw it sitting up, or saw the bed empty, or saw the face so as to recognise it if it was that of a man or woman.

"TO LET, UNFURNISHED,"

In any case I should not have been able to see much of these opposite neighbors, for I was only at home in the morning and evening, and they and other rooms besides the two I have mentioned.

About a fortnight after the lodgers came, I was sitting near my window in the early morning, when my attention was attracted by a figure at the window of the ante-room opposite, wrapped, as it seemed, in a white sheet. A corner of the sheet was drawn up round the head and hung over the face like a cowl, so that although the person was looking out of the window, no trace of form or feature could be seen; and the arms, which were crossed, were also tightly covered by the sheet. For a few seconds it passed at the window, and I, sitting partly behind my window curtain, could see without being seen. Then it entered the inner room, into which I could see very distinctly, as the two doors were open.

And here it seems necessary to state that the effect produced upon me at the time by this person in a sheet has been intensified, and has received an added horror, from circumstances which occurred later. It is difficult to describe that which follows without allowing this horror to creep in, and yet, so far as I can remember, I was not sensible of it at the time, and felt only a strange attraction and interest; and a half surprise that any one should dress up and play the fool at seven o'clock in the morning.

The figure, as I have said, entered the inner room, and stood for some time quite motionless by the bed-side. Then slowly the arms were stretched out, pointing at something or some one in the bed; the head, still covered by the sheet, was bent downwards; the whole attitude was that of one speaking with an earnest and eager intensity. But soon there was the strangest change; the figure started, gave a wild bound, and commenced leaping and dancing around the bed, standing with outstretched arms for a moment at the foot of it, and then springing first to one side and then to the other with such wonderful rapidity that it was impossible to follow every movement.

At length there was a pause; again the hands and arms were stretched out; again they pointed, and, as it seems to me now, in bitter mockery, to the bed, and then the body swayed and bent backwards, and the head was thrown up in one long burst of uproarious laughter. It seemed to me that I could hear the mocking sounds even above all the noises in the street. I do not know if turned away for a moment, or if the figure crouched down, but I remember my surprise at finding that it had left the bed-room, and was again standing at the window of the ante-room. From thence it passed out into the passage, and I saw no more of it.

The bed was, as usual, occupied, but I do not remember noticing any movement on the part of the occupier.

Early in the summer evening I returned from my daily work, and sat at the window to watch the sun as, like a solitary eye of fire glowing through mist and smoke with a dim angry light, it sank down into the heart of the great city. The blinds of the room opposite were drawn down, and the windows were shut, and they remained so on the following morning. But in the evening, as I watched from my window in the dusk, I saw two men coming down the street, bearing on their shoulders a coffin. They stooped at the house opposite, and carried the coffin in and up stairs, and through the ante-room, and into that room with the bed, which was opposite to mine. I saw the shadow of it cast upon the white window blinds, for some one went first carrying a candle.

And then I knew that there was death in the room, and that the antic which had mocked and made sport on the previous day, had mocked at the dying or the dead.

The following day was Sunday, and I was at my window again, when the plain deal coffin was carried down the stairs, and put into a shabby hearse. This was followed by a street cab, and one small person stepped quickly into it, closely muffled in a black cloak. I could not tell whether this person was young or old, and could only guess whether it was man or woman; but something in the rapid resolute movements at once recalled the sheeted figure which had so startled me. I could not watch the house again, it was too terrible; and when I returned home I saw that the bed had been removed, the windows were wide open, and there were new bills announcing that the rooms were "To Let, Unfurnished."

The New Treaty with Japan.

We have received the Kanagawa Commercial News to October 17, giving full accounts of the immediate results following the late successful attack of the allied fleet at Simonoseki, such as the amicable adjustment of all matters in dispute, the promised payment by the Japanese Government and provinces of $3,000,000 indemnity, and the brisk renewal of business at the commercial ports. All restrictions having been removed, large quantities of silk accumulated at Yeddo have arrived at Kanagawa, and the European merchants are congratulating themselves upon the imposed prospects for business. Nevertheless, misgivings are felt that difficulties attending commercial and social intercourse with Japan have not wholly ceased, and that it is at least prudent to retain within reach a considerable portion of the naval force which has been used with beneficial results, until Japanese tactics are more fully developed. At the same time there is some hope that the Japanese will submit to the laws of progress, and recognize the fact that it is no longer possible, with hundreds of foreign steamers plying on their waters, to keep in seclusion from the outside world.

From the Kanagawa News of October 15.

Since our last issue we have to remark that within a few days after the arrival of the combined squadron at this port the foreign plenipotentiaries proceeded to Yeddo, accompanied by the greater portion of the fleet. In the conferences held between the various foreign Ministers and the Gorodjo, all the matters under discussion have terminated amicably, and highly satisfactory arrangements made regarding the future. The various ministers, after a short stay at Yeddo, returned to Yokohama.

All restrictions are now removed and trade allowed to follow its accustomed course without any further molestation. As we have not been favored with authentic particulars, we can only state from information given to us to the effect that the conferences ended highly satisfactorily. The treaty is now to be signed by the Mikado and several Daimios who had hitherto dissented. Prince Choshi is to pay indemnity to the extent of two millions of dollars, and the Government of the Tycoon are to pay the sum of one million dollars. The Dutch are to receive the sum of $130,000 as an indemnity for firing upon the Medusa.

After such highly satisfactory arrangements have been made, we consider that great "Kudos" is due to Her Britannic Majesty's plenipotentiary for the able and satisfactory manner he has conducted the various complications to such a successful termination. We also congratulate our mercantile community on the reopening of trade under such favorable circumstances.

The presence of the allied squadron before Yeddo seemed to have a most wonderful effect on the Japanese Government, as shown by the alacrity with which they acceded to all demands and removal of all restrictions on trade.

We also learn, from information received by H. M. S. Barossa, that Prince Choshi is very desirous to open Simonoseki for foreign trade, and hope he may be enable to do so, as the location is one of the most eligible in the Inland Sea, and accessible to both steamers and sailing vessels.

—The Invalide Russe of the 10th ult. announces the execution of three officers—Captain Ivanicki, Lieutenant Mroczet; and Second Lieutenant Stankewitch—pursuant to the sentence of a court martial held at Kazan, for having conspired with the Polish revolutionists to excite an insurrection among the population of Kazan. Lieutenant Michailoff, of Russian origin, found guilty of having been cognizant of the plot without making it known to the authorities, was sentenced by the same court martial to hard labor in a fortress for fourteen years.
