

A VIRGINIA TOUR.

From our own Correspondent. WEST POINT, Va., Sept. 21, 1868. The American Agricultural and Mineral Land Company have just reached this point, the seat of their recently purchased tracts. The day is cloudy, promising rain. The night past has been one of storm and unpleasantness, the bay rough, the clouds heavy, and overcast with gloom; but within the good steamer Kennebec all was pleasant and cheerful. The tract of land purchased by the Company comprises five thousand acres directly at West Point, five hundred acres of which are to be laid out in town and garden lots, the remainder in farms to suit the purchaser, from one hundred to five hundred acres.

192 cultural wealth, prostrating the energies of the people, and turning into a fifth-rate agricultural country the most wealthy and beneficent soil the State of Virginia has under its control. You can see signs of it everywhere. These old farmers of the slave regime saw their wheat, their corn, and rye grow to an almost unparalleled extent, their yields positively enormous, yet with no ambition, no energy, no absolute care beyond the immediate present, they have lived and died, generation after generation, ruminating to their lands, useless to themselves, and unknown to the community.

349 worse fate, her desertion of him and return to New York, where, in the midst of opulence and after many incidents, she is reunited to her husband, who is now "Lieutenant Trueheart." Miss Kate Bateman is now making a tour of the larger towns in England with much success. She is said to have improved much since last season in her acting. She has a complete finish, and acts with better judgment.
