The State Situation.

There are no where any indications that the alignment of parties in Pennsylvania as it exists at this hour will be materially changed. The efforts being put forth by gentlemen whose motives cannot be impugned to effect some accommodation between the factions of the Republican party serves to emphasize the critical nature of the political situation, but it is not probable that the situation can be altered in any essential respect. Were it demonstrable that a spirit of accommodation really existed in inchoate form, prompt measures wisely taken could do much to heal the divisions. The trouble is not so much with the masses as it is with the leaders who have set their stakes, and whose combativeness is aroused in just the measure that their pride is enlisted. The condition of the political atmosphere is not such as to admit of a long look ahead. "So far as moderately assisted vision can go, we seem to have entered upon a long spell of weather," and it is the part of wisdom to accept the situation with all its possibilities.

Without assuming to be in the confidence of the managers of the campaign, we feel no hesitation in saying that the various rumors, and rumors of rumors, which have been current for some days, to the general effect that General Beaver will be withdrawn in some way by somebody, may be dismissed as utterly idle and unworthy of circulation. We take the action of the committees to be final, so far as it can affect the status of the candidates. General Beaver will not be withdrawn, unless he withdraws himself. That he contemplates retiring we see no reason to believe, because so far as the people are supposed to be especially in favor of any candidate in particular, they have given him reason to believe that they favor him. We can admit that he has not the party solid behind him, yet not weaken the argument in his favor as the only candidate in the field with a strictly popular backing. Certainly no considerable proportion of this State is located either Mr. Stewart or Mr. Pattison in advance of the bodies which nominated those gentlemen. Mr. Stewart was not the man selected or located in advance of the popular action which constituted the Philadelphia Convention. Nor was Mr. Pattison the man indicated by any popular action outside of the city and neighborhood. Either of these gentelmen might be withdrawn without offence to any public sentiment in their favor existing at the time they became candidates. But neither will be withdrawn by their managers, as we suppose nearly everybody admits, and there is no more reason to suppose that General Beaver will be withdrawn.

Under these circumstances regrets are vain and remonstrance is ineffectual. Though men know, or think they know, what might have been, they have no option but to deal with the questions, of the hour as they find them presented. The only change that can be reasonably looked for is the gradual growth of popular sentiment in favor of General Beaver, not because he is or claims to be, the regularly constituted color bearer of the Republican party, but because he is an honest, able and conscientious man, a soldier of renown, and a citizen without blemish. These advantages must have their effect in a contest so peculiar. Thousands of Republicans who detest machine methods and truculent domination will still hesitate before they deliberately strike down a brave soldier who enjoys the repect of all with whom he comes in contact. That he is stronger to-day than he was six weeks ago must be conceded else the average of public sentiment as expressed indicates nothing.—From the Philadelphia North American, Ind. Rep.

Pension Statistics.

A statement prepared at the Pension Bureau shows that during the fiscal year ended June 30th, 40,939 original claims for pensions and 34,148 claims for pension were filed.

There were allowed during the year 27,364 original applications, and 10,231 for increase of pensions. The number of claims rejected was 21,295. There remain pending 269,678 original applications, and 21,288 applications for increase. The total amount paid for pensions during the year, including the cost of disbursement, was $51,296,280,50. The total number of pensioners on the roll is 285,697, a gain over the previous year of 16,857. The total amount paid by the government for pensions from 1791 to 1861 was $81,480,455,50. The total amount paid from 1861 to June 30th, 1882, was $560,611,324,75. Out of this amount, and since 1871, $25,234,132,85 has been paid to the survivors of the war of 1812, and to the widows of those who served during that war. Deducting this latter amount and estimating that which may have been paid to pensioners on account of the wars prior to 1861 and 1865, about $530,060,000 have been disbursed on account of pensions.

Chief Engineer Melville, of the lost Jeannette in the Arctic expedition, after being enthusiastically received at New York and Philadelphia, on his return, reached his little cottage home at Sharon Hill, near Philadelphia, on Saturday evening last, where all his neighbors turned out to welcome him, while Chinese lanterns burned and great good feeling prevailed. But there was an affliction amid the rejoicing. Mrs. Melville's nervous system was so overtaxed that she became insane.

While three boys were rowing on the river at Reading, Saturday, some one threw a lighted cigar into the water which was thickly covered with benzine from the gas works. They were enveloped in flames and jumped overboard. William Speers had his face and neck badly burned; he may lose his eyesight. Matthew Buckley and Francis Cullen also received serious burns.

All the signs of the times indicate that trade is reviving, and that we may look for a prosperous and busy condition of business during the coming fall and winter months. The bountiful crops all over the country has had much to do with this. As it looks at present business men need not be afraid to embark in new enterprises, where they exercise a reasonable degree of caution, and to build new houses, mills and factories.

A peach grower, who shipped one hundred baskets at Mixon, Del., last week, netted just 97 cents. He seems to think that he should have had three cents more, or an average of one cent per basket. The railroads received for carrying these peaches $97, the carter $3, the commission merchant $6.78, and the grower 97 cents.

On Saturday, Sept. 16, fourteen men went to a picnic in a band box. This sounds queer but never the less true. The McClure Cornet Band was present.

On Sunday night Sept. 17, a sorral horse belonging to J. M. Troxell had his right hind leg kicked off by a vicious horse in an adjoining stall belonging to his brother.

LECTURES ON EVOLUTION. By Prof. T. H. HUXLEY. (Illustrated.) Price 15 cents. J. Fitzgerald & Co., Publishers, 30 Lafayette Place, New York.

This valuable work forms number 30 of the "Humboldt Library," a collection of works by the most eminent scientists of our time, such as Huxley, Spencer, Tyndall, Proctor, etc. They are printed from clear type, on good paper. The enterprise of bringing the best popular scientific literature within the reach of all is one that merits, and doubtless will receive, the hearty support of every one interested in the diffusion of useful knowledge. It is to be hoped that instructive volumes like these, in which the charms of literary style serve to render attractive the teachings of science will in time have the effect of banishing from our homes the demoralising trash which passes current as "Literature."
