"THE ANSON HARDY CUTTING MACHINES are the best and cheapest low priced machine made, and have a national reputation for utility and durability."—The Electrotypist, Chicago.

"THE ANSON HARDY PAPER CUTTER is by far the best machine which can be obtained for a less price than one hundred dollars. It is of great strength. These machines have always taken the highest stand. It is the only machine to which is applied the Patent Movable Cutting Board. This device has a reputation of itself; by it, the cutting board can be instantly and accurately moved, so that a perfect cut is insured. This is a very important point in the machine, and one that is possessed by no other. It greatly reduces the labor of preparation in working the paper backward and forward. We cannot too strongly recommend the advantages of this patent movable board. It is worth the price of this machine, and purchasers should fully understand how highly it is to be valued."—Geo. P. Rowell & Co.'s Newspaper Reporter and Printer's Gazette.

"THE LATEST IMPROVED HARDY CARD CUTTER is pronounced the most desirable Card Cutter in the market, for the general uses of a printing office.

The well known RUGGLES CARD CUTTER, with my latest improvements, is still preferred by many printers, and holds its favoritism over other machines.

None genuine but those having my full address lettered in the casting.

Newspapers in want of advertising from first parties should send for my circular.

A SLIP ON SLIPPERS.

THE SAD EXPERIENCE OF A BIG FOOTED BROKER.

Illustrating at the Same Time the Size of the Chicago Foot.

Augustus Harrison is one of the gay society young men of the West side. He is handsome, he dances well, he waltzes beautifully, says witty things which makes everybody laugh, and parts his hair exactly in the middle. His graceful figure is one of the most familiar at all of the club dances and private parties in that part of the city.

Augustus a day or two ago was in love—deeply, madly in love with Evangeline Jerome, a pretty blonde, who lives on West Monroe street. He first met Evangeline Jerome at one of the club parties given at Martin's last season. He loved her at first sight. Once, while looking over a volume of poetical quotations preparatory to going to Brown's party, which everybody remembers, he came across the line,

He only loves who loves at first sight,

and exclaimed, "That's the gospel truth."

He lavished chocolate caramels on that girl, and the coarse thought that she was the champion caramel-chewer of the West side never flashed upon his intellect. When his sister confidentially told him that Evangeline "toed in," his love was not shaken in the least. Had she told him that his Evangeline had a big mole on her back, he would still have loved that girl. One night this winter he froze his nose while taking her sleigh-riding. Yet he murmured not, though the skin peeled off and made it look like a piece of raw veal cutlet. Oh, he madly loved his Evangeline, and thought she adored the ground—the considerable area of ground—that he stood on.

Wednesday evening he rang the front door bell of the Jerome family mansion. The servant girl came to the door.

"Is Miss Jerome in?"
"Yes. Walk into the parlor, Mr. Harrison. She is dressing. I will tell her you are here."

He walked into the parlor and sat familiarly down in the large arm-chair, which he often convinced Evangeline was big enough to hold them both, and bright expectant smiles agitated the waxed, needle-like ends of his small mustache—the mustache which Evangeline, the flatterer, always said tickled so. Five minutes dragged slowly away. Five more minutes successfully accomplished a similar proceeding. Augustus yawned and wondered why she didn't come, while, as a matter of fact, Miss Jerome had but just put the finishing touch upon the first soap curl. Then he sauntered to the centre table and looked at the photograph album, although he remembered very well that Evangeline had showed them to him the first time he called upon her. Then he sauntered to the little what-not in one of the back corners of the room. A paper parcel, loosely done up, lay on one of these shelves. Augustus picked it up. A pair of slippers dropped out of the paper. "My Christmas present," he murmured softly as he picked them up. "Darling girl. Oh! how I love her," and he fell to admiring the embroidery and the pleasing pattern. On the side of each slipper was a dog with a cardinal red head, a black body, and a pink tail, chasing a green deer with solferino antlers and a manny tail around each tail around each heel. On the other side of each slipper was a magenta lake, into which these singular deer no doubt intended to plunge to escape these peculiar dogs. "Oh! how beautiful!" exclaimed Augustus. "Dear girl, I knew she would remember me." At this instant he glanced at the sole, and an expression of acute pain, which would have been less inexplicable had it been the green-apple season, passed across his face, and he groaned, "Gracious heavens! number nines. Impossible!" and he held them to the light and looked again. "Yes, number nines. Oh! Evangeline! Evangeline! is it possible? Can it be? Is there another? Oh! cruel, false, heartless, fickle Evangeline. She loves another because he has small feet. The deceitful jade. Oh! how I loved her. 'Loved her? aye, worshipped her, adored her. Heaven help me bear this. She has broken my heart," and he mused up his hair which he had so carefully oiled and slicked, and threw his arms wildly about and paced the room in great excitement, looked extremely wild and haggard, indeed. "Oh the perfidious wretch! Oh, the deceitfulness of woman!" he groaned as he knocked over a chair which stood in his way. "The heartless monster. Only to think how I loved that girl; how I brought her chocolate drops and froze my nose for her. Cuss it!" The last two words referred to a foot rest which he kicked over in his mad career. "Only to think of her falling in love with a man just because he has small feet. How shallow. Oh, Evangeline, I fondly thought you were a woman of mind, of soul."

"Why, what's the matter, Gus," said Evangeline in great surprise, as she entered the room at this juncture.

"Can you ask me what's the matter? Oh, Evangeline, how could you?"

"How could I? How could I what?"

"Do not try to deceive me, Evangeline."

"What do you mean?"

"Those slippers."

"Well?"

"They are not for me. They are for another, a hateful rival."

"How do you know they are not for you?"

"They are number nines. You know, Evangeline, I wear elevens."

"Oh, you stupid! They are for Uncle George."

"You never had an Uncle George. You are deceiving me."

"I am not."

"You are."

"Can't you believe me?"

"No."

"You are no gentleman."

"You are a deceitful hussy."

"I hate and despise you."

"I don't doubt it."

"I shall call papa."

"You may, for all I care."

"Papa! Papa!" called the lovely Evangeline.

Papa: immediately entered the parlor and asked excitedly.

"What is the matter, my child?"

"This man has insulted me."

"Insulted you, my daughter! Get out of my house, sir!"

"I will go when I get ready, you baldheaded old fool, you."

"You infernal rascal, you'll go now," and Mr. Jerome planted a kick in the neighborhood but slightly protected by Augustus Harrison's broadcloth coat-tails.

Augustus then threw a fancy glass paper weight at Mr. Jerome, which struck that elderly gentleman in the head, and glancing therefrom, smashing a Sevres vase which stood on the mantle piece; and young Jerome rushed out of the house and bawled "Plice! Plice!" and Augustus was in the hands of an officer by the time he could slip into his overcoat and put on his hat.

Eyel-ogers on the West side eventually find their way to Justice Scully, and that grave man of the law frowned upon Augustus Harrison on yesterday morning, and after hearing the evidence from the several witnesses, fined him $10 and rebuked him with a severe reprimand.—Chicago Times.

The Washington correspondent for the Chicago Times says that "Lamar, exasperated beyond endurance by the insinuation that he had authorized a correspondent for a Southern journal to speak for him, wrote a very vehement denunciation and denial to a Washington journal, stigmatizing the purported action as a dishonesty of which no act of his life gave warrant for any one to believe him guilty. Lamar is not on y opposed to the Hayes conspiracy, but is one of the few strong constitutional lawyers who hold that the House of Representatives, being particularized in the constitution as the body having the power to elect the Senate, has plainly no co-ordinate voice save in electing its own presiding officer. As to Hayes, Lamar is at a loss to understand how he can be an honest man and permit himself to be used by disreputable political gamblers, who are using him as a decoy to win place for themselves."

The condition into which the business interests of the country have been thrown by the Presidential muddle is clearly shown by the petitions sent to Congress by the great trade centres in favor of the passage of the electoral bill. The whole country wants the matter settled speedily, and Congress will hardly be able to withstand the pressure.

The Washington Chronicle, a Radical newspaper, has suspended publication.
