Greek Premier Has Been Rolled Into a Trapping By British

Greece has received a warning that the British government is about to take steps to involve it in the Balkan crisis. The Greek premier, Eleftherios Venizelos, has been informed that the British are preparing to send a mission to Athens to discuss the situation in the Balkans.

Greece is under pressure from the British to join the Entente against Germany. The British have been encouraging Greece to take a more active role in the region, and Venizelos is expected to meet with British officials this week to discuss the matter.

The warning to Greece comes as the Entente, comprised of France, Russia, and Britain, is pushing for a united front against Germany. The British are particularly concerned about the stability of Greece, which they see as a key ally in the region.

The Greek government is expected to respond to the British message, and Venizelos is likely to use the occasion to discuss the situation with his British counterpart.

Greece, like other Entente powers, has been under pressure to take a more active role in the conflict. The British are keen to see a united front against Germany, and Greece is likely to play a significant role in this effort.
