The first prize of $100 donated by the Albert Steinfeld company, and the Tucson Farms company, as well as a cultivator given by the Tucson Seed company, and the second prize of a stout young pecker, given to the winners of the corn contest in Arizona, were awarded to Victor Bail and Alonzo Flores, both Papago Indians, at an entertainment held at the San Xavier Mission Saturday night. The prizes were won by the Indians working under the tutelage of W. O. Hodgson, agency farmer, in competition with more than 275 members of the Arizona Corn Club scattered throughout the state, Bail the winner, harvested a total of 51 bushels of grain making a net profit of more than $65 on his single acre of ground. Flores was close behind him with a production of more than 45 bushels while the nearest competitors of the Indian youths were far behind.—Tucson, Arizona, Daily Star.
