Having been a silent reader of your valuable paper a long time and never have written any, but seeing so many letters from over the United States I could not refrain from giving your readers the news of this part of the moral vineyard which leaves all rejoicing over the good rain falling softly upon the house-tops and the deep toned thunders rolling beyond the frowning hills which reminds us of our duty to him who does all things well.

The people are very busy laying corn by.

Crops look promising and have been very well cultivated.

Gardens suffered some, and Irish potatoes are almost a failure.

Hon. Morgan Stout of Spring Fork was a pleasant visitor in this part last of the week.

Say, what has become of Dr. Mumps? His prescription was good. If he is not dead I would like to hear from Route 9.

St. John, Kansas

As I have just finished reading the Herald I feel like I had been visiting with friends and neighbors. I see so many names that look familiar although most of you have grown up since I left dear old Tennessee. But I once knew your parents and grandparents of so many.

It is very hot and dry here.

People are all through harvesting.

The wheat crop was light and corn is needing rain badly, and gardens and fruit are drying up.

Well, July the 26th is my birthday and I would appreciate a card from any reader of the Herald as a cheap post card will mean so much to me.

You Tennessee girls had better look out as there is an old Kansas bachelor who has gone back there looking for something or somebody, and he has a house but no cook. MRS. M. C. FERGUS,

May and most of June were dry here.

Crops were clean and in good condition when the rains set in the latter part of June.

The crop prospects here are very flattering. Early corn is about made. Bolls are forming on cotton.

The Fourth was a gala day for Meridian. Mr. Gill of the Wright Company gave two exhibitions in his airship. The first one only went about four hundred feet high. He curved around and swooped down and up again with all ease. Some buzzards were sailing leisurely about until they took fright at the huge bird that was carrying Mr. Gill. He chased them and said he would have caught them if they had not darted down among the tree tops where he could not follow. The second flight he was said to go about two thousand feet and would have gone higher if a wind had not interfered. He descended so rapidly many thought his machine had become unmanageable. He lit in a cotton field about a quarter of a mile from the fair grounds where he made his start and where he intended to light had it not been for the gale.

At 10 a. m. Bilbo, candidate for Lieutenant Governor, spoke to a large and enthusiastic crowd in a grove near town. He proceeded to take the lid off and expose the fraud in the legislature that defeated Jas. K. Vardaman for U. S. Senator. At 7:30 in the evening Vardaman arrived and was met at the depot by a throng of admirers who picked him up and placed him on a cart drawn by 80 yoke of oxen. With a man on each of the 160 steers and 100 on horse-back, a throng on foot and five brass bands paraded through the main streets of the town. Men, women and children pushed through the mass to try to touch the hem of his garment, notwithstanding there was a continual drizzle of rain. He was so hoarse he could hardly be heard as he spoke out in the open air on the square. On account of the rain I didn't attend the Vardaman rally, but it was no trouble to hear them yelling two miles away. With all this there was very little if any drinking and no fighting.

The half has not been told but I must close for this time.
