Knoxville, Tenn., July 24, 1861.

PUBLIC MEETING IN KNOXVILLE:

Hon. Horace Mann, nominated for

A large and intelligent audience were the scenes of this meeting of the Tennessee Democrats. A majority of the members of the Legislature, state and district, and other prominent citizens, were present. The meeting was called to order by Mr. A. J. Forsyth, who delivered an oration on the principles of the party, and the necessity of maintaining them. The orator's speech was followed by a vote of thanks to Mr. Mann, and a resolution was adopted expressing the hope that he would receive the nomination of the party for the office of Governor of Tennessee.

The Election of State Senator.

The election of the state senator, the Hon. J. B. Carter, was the next order of business. The Hon. J. B. Carter was unanimously elected, and the meeting adjourned.

The Kiln of the South.

Mr. J. B. Carter, in his remarks on the election of the state senator, referred to the Kiln of the South, and the necessity of the South's future progress. He said that the Kiln of the South must be kept up, and that the South must be strong in the future. He called attention to the importance of the state senator's position, and the necessity of the South's future progress.

The School of Cleveland.

Mr. J. B. Carter, in his remarks on the election of the state senator, referred to the School of Cleveland, and the necessity of the South's future progress. He said that the School of Cleveland must be kept up, and that the South must be strong in the future. He called attention to the importance of the state senator's position, and the necessity of the South's future progress.