Department of Justice Plans Investigation Storage Warehouses

False Rumors of Character of Men Army Occupation

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—(By United Press.)—Department of Justice officials today planned storage houses in which holdings of butter, products and poultry have increased from two dred per cent since last year. Prices for the mounted high during the same year. Editor Greenville Sun, Greenville, Tenn., Dear Mr. Editor:— Learning that my other letter found space in the Sun, I am going to write again. I am still in Germany and enjoying good health, friends, if that's any news to you. About the only signs I've seen or heard of this outfit, coming home are rumors. Probably you have heard them yourself. Speaking of rumors reminds me of a certain rumor we have heard concerning the class of men that are left here in Germany, and I wish to make a little comment on that rumor. We have learned through rumors that it is the general opinion of the American people that all of the soldiers are back now except a class of men that have infected some disease or that were put in the mill for some offense or other, and are left here in a labor battalion. It is my desire to let the readers of the Sun know that the rumor is false, or our people have been misled by tales told by soldiers that have been discharged. Most all of the soldiers that are now serving in Germany are old men that have been in the most and roughest hardships of the war. They were the first in the lines and were in all of the offensive drives made by the American forces, except those that made the supreme sacrifice. The hardships of these men can only be realized by men that have had similar experiences—and I'm not speaking of myself, as I've only witnessed a part of the hardships most of these men have; and I want the readers of the Sun to know that there's not a better class of Americans anywhere on an average than those now serving in Germany. I also want to speak a few words in behalf of the regular soldier. You know it used to be the opinion of most people that the regular soldier was only a bum, that he either had no home or else he had committed some crime and joined the army to dodge the law, or something of this kind. We were content to think of them in this way until Old Glory was furled in battle. When war was declared our opinions quickly changed; and we praised the soldier above everybody, because we felt that he was protecting what we valued most sacred. I have been serving with a regular outfit—most of the men being emergency men, as most of the regulars were killed or wounded. So let us not drift back to the former opinion as we are again at peace. Let us look at it this way: Some one must patrol our borders and serve under the colors to keep America great and strong. Let us look at the soldier's life as a profession and continue to respect him. We have heard here that it was an awful hard job for a returned soldier to find work. And while I'll admit that this doesn't apply to the boys of Greene county, yet I wish to express my opinion on the subject. I certainly believe that there is work for every American boy if they really want to work. Now don't you agree with me? And furthermore, I'll venture to say that the majority of returned soldiers that have not found work in a short time after their return home, are men that never had any work or didn't want to work before they entered the service. I don't blame any man for taking a little vacation when he first gets home, for he deserves it. Yet there is absolutely no use of any one sitting down and saying that he has done his service for America, for if he thinks soberly he will realize that his service has only begun. Well, friends I had better close as it is about "chow" time and you know no soldier ever wants to miss being up for his mess. I have no idea when I'll get back home, but certainly hope it won't be very long. Yours for service, CORPL. ROSS OTTINGER, Co. E. 18th Inf.

National Grange Calls for Abolition of War-Time Food Control; Control of Exports; Etc. of Legislation to Protect

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—(By United Press.)—National Grange today planned a program calling for the repeal of the war-time food control act, the abolition of the control of exports of legislation to protect the farmers, and the National Grange, representing seven hundred farmers, was the first to be heard before the joint session of the Agricultural Committee today by the National Grange, who stated it was supported by other farm organizations.
