Money Loaned at Lower Rates Than Ever

I am taking applications for loans on lands in Obion and Weakley Counties, Tenn., and Fulton County, Ky., so that the cost and expense of same is less than has been possible heretofore at any time. I have arrangements to make loans of more than two thousand dollars cheaper and on better terms than I or anyone else has ever been able to make them in either of the counties above mentioned. The borrower has the privilege of paying all or any part of indebtedness after one year, interest being stopped on payments made. Loans are made on ten years time or for shorter periods, if desired.

DEEDS, NOT WORDS.
UNION CITY PEOPLE HAVE ABSOLUTE PROOF OF DEEDS AT HOME
It's not words but deeds that prove true merit.
The deeds of Doan's Kidney Pills. I, Union City kidney sufferers, have made their local reputation. Proof lies in the testimony of Union City people who have been cured to stay cured.
J. M. Cole, 681 S. Fifth St., Union City, Tenn., says: "It is a pleasure for me to confirm all I said about Doan's Kidney Pills when I publicly endorsed them in 1907. My back was extremely lame and often I had pains through my kidneys. The kidney secretions passed irregularly and looked unnatural. Hearing about Doan's Kidney Pills, I used them and in a short time they brought me entire relief. I am certainly in a position to say that this remedy acts as represented.

ALEXANDER CASE AFFIRMED

Supreme Court at Jackson Sentences Alexanders to Hang.
The State Supreme Court sentenced three men to be hanged in the third week in July next and decided a number of other criminal cases of lesser degree in the long list of opinions delivered.
Will Ed Alexander and Emmett Alexander, uncle and nephew, who killed Walter Simmons, at a picnic on Mud Creek in Obion County on August 6, 1910, will die on the gallows at the State penitentiary in Nashville on July 15, unless Governor Hooper intervenes.
Associate Judge Grafton Green delivered an exhaustive opinion affirming the verdict of Criminal Court of Obion County in this case. Justice Green's opinion sustained the trial Judge in disregarding the mitigating circumstances clause of the jury's verdict.

The Alexanders were farmers and they killed Simmons as the result of a drunken quarrel over a crap game at the picnic on Mud Creek.

Will Ed is some forty-odd years of age, a well-built man. He is married. Emmett is the older man's nephew, smaller of stature and unmarried. The men received the verdict calmly in the courtroom, but on the return to jail Emmett almost suffered a collapse.

Both of the men had good reputations until the time of the tragedy, but their was a brutal one. They were tried twice together with John R. Alexander, father of Emmett, who was convicted with them, but granted a new trial, which is now pending. The first trial resulted in a hung jury. The second trial was in May, 1911, and when the sentence was passed Judge Jones reviewed the case in substance as follows:

There was a picnic one mile west of Limbs on the 6th day of August, 1910, and sometime during the day a large crap game was in progress. Engaged in the game was a young man named Walter Simmons. The Alexanders, John R., his son, Emmett, and his brother, Will Ed, were looking for a friend named Staley. Staley was found playing the crap game with Simmons and Simmons had won $1.50 of Staley's money. Staley made some remark to the effect that he did not want to leave the money, whereupon Simmons remarked to the Alexanders, "What have you big ——— got to do with it?" This led to a cross fire of words, something being said between Will Ed and Emmett about an automatic. Then Simmons spoke about going after a pistol and left the game. He did not go far, but mounted a horse and rode back toward the grounds. The Alexanders had stopped at a surrey on the grounds near by and, seeing Simmons riding up, John R. went up to him and took hold of the bridle reins. Simmons wheeled his horse and John R. fell. In the meantime Emmett approached and assaulted Simmons with a knife. Will Ed was close by and told Emmett to stab him hard. Emmett stabbed him again and Simmons fell to the ground. After the wounded man had fallen, Will Ed took hold of his head and burned it against the ground, claiming that Simmons was sulking. John R. was still close by, and, whether or not he was guilty of conspiracy, it was not shown, but he took no active part in the killing. After Simmons was killed he told the crowd to stand back in order perhaps to protect his son, Emmett. Friends of the wounded man came and took him to a buggy and started home, and Simmons expired on the way. It was shown that witnesses saw no pistol on the body and none was seen during the killing. Witnesses testified that he had no pistol when he was killed.

THIRD MAN FOR GALLOWES.
Stanley Means, a youth of 20 years, who killed J. T. Workman in Weakley County last May, was the third man to be sentenced to the gallows. By a majority opinion the court sentenced Means to be hanged on July 16.

Associate Justice M. M. Neil delivered the opinion and pronounced the sentence, though dissenting from the opinion of the majority of the court as to the punishment. Justices Neil and Lansden were of the opinion that the trial judge should have held to the finding of the jury that there were mitigating circumstances to the crime and held that the death sentence imposed on the young man should be commuted to life imprisonment.
However, it was the opinion of Justices

Shields, Green and Buchanan that Means should pay the extreme penalty of the law as prescribed by the lower court.

On a night in May of 1911, Means went to the home of J. T. Workman, and after calling him to the door, deliberately shot him down. With the assistance of relatives and by spending the days in tree tops, Means escaped from the community, but was captured a few months later, when he attempted to join the United States army at Little Rock.

When brought back to Dresden for trial, the young man confessed his guilt and offered no reasonable explanation for his action. He said that he remembered the event of the night vaguely and thought that he was drunk at the time. He said that he arose from his bed at his father's home, secured a gun and went to Workman's home a short distance away and killed him.

THREATENED WORKMAN
He gave no clear motive, and Justice Neil stated that none appeared clearly from the record. Evidence was introduced at the time showing that Means had threatened to kill Workman before and that he had been placed under a peace bond. His arrest at this time had preyed on the youth's mind, the Court stated, and that he was frequently found crying to himself or talking morosely of his troubles.

Means called his victim from his bed twice. When first awakened from his slumbers, Workman arose from his bed and opened the back door of his home. The night was dark and he could see no one outside. After waiting a moment or two and calling out into the night several times, without receiving an answer, Workman returned to his bed. He almost dropped off to sleep again, when he was aroused by call from outside. His home, this time from the front. His wife pleaded with him not to open the door this time, but Workman paid no heed. He arose, struck a light and went to the door. A moment later he had thrown it open, and he was fired upon from the darkness outside and fell back into the room dead.

In his confession Stanley Means said that after shooting Workman he ran back home, slipped quietly to bed and did not awake until nearly noon of the following day. He then went to his father and brother and told them that he was in trouble, and with their assistance, escaped from the community, though bloodhounds were placed on his trail and followed him for several days.
