Capt. Brevard Steele, we understand, who arrived recently at Camp Dix from the Army of Occupation in Germany, came over on the army transport known as the Crook, an old steamer condemned some forty years ago in the war. He was in charge of the crew and six officers, and it is said that but for the great skill and engineering of the engineers the whole crew would have gone to the bottom of the sea. He says that the use of this rotten old steamer was the result of the many desperate chances taken in the time of great emergency. Let our men over in time to come advance hun.
