GABERT BROS.

An Intelligent Dog.

Mr. W. L. Caudle, the popular steward at the Pacific, is the owner of a very intelligent dog which he has taught to do many amusing tricks and to perform useful services. This dog is a daily visitor at THE NEWS office, where he brings the copy for the daily bills of fare to be printed and is highly esteemed. He was written up in THE NEWS some time ago and his intelligence and good qualities highly commended. Mr. Caudle is responsible for the following extravagant statement, which is, however, vouched for by Mr. Sam Treadwell, foreman of the job department. He states that the write up was read to "Dude" and it gave him the big-head so badly that he could do nothing with him for several days afterwards. The next day he started the faithful animal to the office as usual with the copy, but instead of bringing it he determined he would take a lay off and hid it in an old blacksmith shop several blocks away. When he was sent after the work which was supposed to have been finished he refused to go. Upon investigation it was found that he had not delivered the copy that day and was given a whipping, for dereliction of duty, and directed to produce the copy. This he did in short order and by putting on an extra force the work was run off just in time.

It is also said that he is so familiar with the names of three of the compositors of the job department that he refuses to deliver the copy to anyone except the one his master names. Caudle declares he will never read THE NEWS to Dude again.

THE LOUNGER.

One of the passions of the human race, is a desire for being well dressed. It is a passion that has raged ever since Eve in the Garden of Eden made for herself a stylish, even though very décolleté, costume of fig leaves and danced the germau with Adam, who wore a pigeon-tailed coat made of one leaf from a century plant. The passion for dress has increased daily from that time until now, and while some people do not care for a great amount of it, they want the finest and most fashionable to be had.

I was strolling on the Fourth street, which is the Boulevard of Waco, last Saturday, and was particularly struck with an exhibition of clothing and men's furnishing goods. This display was so great and attractive, I thought I was in Paris, and began jabbering French to several parties who were near me. I could not realize even after being awakened from my fanciful reverie, that I was in Waco.

This attractive display is rendered more attractive by being shown in the largest plate glass window in Texas. Not a sign nor a mark appeared to show whose house it was, but when I cast an oblique glance into the nearest doorway, I discovered the handsome face and jolly figure of my friend J. Hansel Wood and his brother Dero Wood. I also discerned Geo. Yarbrough smiling like a sun-beam, and several other salesmen, who were busily engaged in showing and selling goods. They had suits of every description on their counters.—Spring suits, summer suits, marriage suits, divorce suits and every kind of suit imaginable except rejected suits, convict suits and libel suits. George Yarbrough said there were some rejected suits there, but no rejected suits.

I wandered in bewilderment through the spacious storerooms, and although I kept my hands in my pockets, one of the clerks kept his eye on me. I suppose he wanted to see if I was well pleased. When I reached the rear end of the building I saw, or thought I saw, a large opening into another apartment, which looked as gorgeous as the first. I concluded to walk in, but a man who looked very much like myself stood in front of me and wouldn't get out of the way. I tried to pass him, but he remained right in front of me all the time. I then heard the salesmen laughing, and one of them told me not to walk through the mirror.

This embarrassed me considerably but I continued my rounds and became more and more enchanted as I looked through that vast stock of goods and examined the frescoing and fine work on the walls and ceiling. The shoe department was complete, the hat department more so and the furnishing goods department made me sigh for a raise in my salary. I remained nearly an hour, and saw something new and attractive every time I turned my head. I am considered very truthful and am willing to risk my reputation for veracity on the statement that there is not a handsomer store nor a handsomer stock of goods in Texas than is now being shown by the J. Hansel Wood Shoe and Clothing Company. There may be a few people in Waco who have no faith in my claim for truthfulness, but they will have, after visiting this store. It is complete and neat; it is novel; it is interesting and attractive; it is an ornament to Waco, and reflects great credit on the gentlemen who own it.

THE LOUNGER.

ALL OVER TOWN.

The Hobson line is doing a rushing business. The motor men present a good appearance in the handsome new uniforms.

The motormen of the Hobson line are out in their new uniform of light grey. The suits are very stylish. They were made by the Gabert Brothers.

In mentioning the names of the contestants for the World's Fair scholarship race last Saturday THE NEWS contained the name of Sam Owens which was an error. It should have been Sam Orand.

The case of H. E. Bennett vs. R. H. Hill for a $50 scholarship in Hills business college, and about which much firing and cross firing through the press has been indulged in between the defendant and H. A. Ivy, was dismissed this morning by Justice Gallagher at the cost of the plaintiff.

Miss Ray Goldberg has entered the commercial college of Baylor university and is studying stenography, type writing and penmanship. Prof. Cammack, the proprietor, says that Miss Goldberg shows evidence of having received thorough training in her high studies while at the Academy of the Sacred Heart.

Another seance was held Saturday night at the Waverly, in which quite a number of interested persons participated. Mrs. Tabor, of California, held the boards, and all present were either mystified or converted to the faith. She will remain some time in the city and will give a series of sittings to those who desire to investigate the mysteries of spiritualism. Two other powerful mediums will visit Waco soon and all persons of that belief will, doubtless, see and hear many things of interest to themselves.

John Dickey and Lewine Sears, colored, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock by Justice J. N. Gallagher at noon to-day. It was a case of choice between matrimony or the penitentiary for seduction with the groom, and he chose the former. The bride, though considered, by her acquaintances of her race, quite a belle and unusually comely, she had upon this important occasion a sour expression upon her face and seemed undecided, at first, whether or not she preferred single wretchedness to double blessedness. She however, became reconciled to her fate and the knot was securely tied.

Died.

Arthur Friederick Kophal 7-years of age, son of Mr. Chas. Kophal, died at the residence of his parents Saturday evening at 7 o'clock and was interred at Oakwood cemetery yesterday at 10 a. m.
