Storm at Terrell.

TERRELL, Tex., May 3.—A cloud burst over this city about 5 o'clock yesterday evening. The rain fell in torrents and the wind blew furiously for half an hour. Box cars and buildings were unroofed, negro shanties blown down but no personal injuries inflicted as so far reported.

FROM FORT WINGATE.

To the Carrizo Mountains Hunting An Eldorado.

SANTA FE, N. M., May 3.—Preparations are being made at Fort Wingate for the expedition which starts May 10 to accompany the commission into the Carrizo mountain country and report its character, whether or not it contains mineral and precious ore, and if so to treat with the Navajos for its transfer to the United States.

The commission consists of Brig. Gen. McCook, commanding the department of Arizona, and John Barstow, special disbursing agent. The escort will consist of Capt. J. Mc. Clearand's troop of the twenty-second cavalry and troop L of the second cavalry. The latter is an Indian troop, and will be used for carriers duty. The expedition is expected to return to Fort Wingate about June 25.

SENATOR TYLER.

How Hogg Defeated a Commission Law in 1889

HE DIDN'T NEED A COMMISSION.

Then but Only Wanted a Law Against Trusts as Long as His Finger—An Original Commission Man Wants Clark For Governor.

From the Dallas News.

BELTON, Tex., April 28.—Referring to the report of Judge Clark's speech at Belton as appears in the News and other papers in regard to Gov. Hogg's attitude toward the commission during the twenty-first legislature (1889), I desire to state exactly what I have said and still say upon that subject.

It will be remembered that the railroad commission bill passed the house of representatives and came to the senate, where, after a debate lasting several days and in which nearly all the senators participated, the whole matter was postponed to April 2, 1889, which action amounted to the defeat of the bill. The vote on the motion to postpone was 18 yeas and 12 nays (counting pairs), the friends of the bill voting against and the opponents of the bill voting for the motion to postpone. In the debate the following statement substantially was made by a senator who opposed the bill:

"Your attorney-general, Mr. Hogg, says that if you will pass a short bill known as the 'trust bill,' no longer than your finger (at same time measuring with his index finger), which authorizes the attorney-general to bring suit against trusts and combines, he will control the corporations of your state. He will break up pools and combinations and competition will do the rest and you will not need any commission." etc.

These are very near if not the exact words used by the senator. The sense, I know, is the same. Other senators in the twenty-first legislature will, doubtless, recall the circumstance. The statement was openly made in debate on the floor of the senate and was never contradicted or questioned by Gen. Hogg to my knowledge.

What influence this attitude of the then attorney-general had upon the votes of the senators, I am unable to say, but it is reasonable to presume that his prestige was great enough to influence at least four votes upon a question about which there was then much doubt, perplexity and conflict of opinion. At the beginning of that session it was understood that a majority of the senators favored the commission and something caused a change of sentiment with several senators.

As for myself, I was then a commission man, went down with the minority in defeat and have not so soon forgotten the circumstances under which it was accomplished. I am still a commission man, and no one took more pride than I did in the splendid vindication accorded by the people in 1890 to the minority of 1889, though somewhat surprised at the sudden conversion of some of the leaders in that campaign. In the twenty-second legislature I heartily supported the bill that became the law upon our statute book, except that I voted to make the commissioners elective instead of appointive, and I had some doubts as to whether the bill provided for the "due process of law," as required by the federal constitution, and that question is still open for the courts to determine.

As a commission man I see no merit in the cry now being raised that the commission is in danger. It is the law of the land, spoken into existence by the people. No one is opposing it on the stump and no legislature or governor will dare to disturb it until its usefulness is fairly and fully tried.

Gov. Hogg claims to have championed the idea in the last campaign, but to my vision, then and now, he did only what every candidate in the state from governor to constable did, regardless of race, color or previous condition—whether previously for or against the commission—he saw the commission coming as a great tidal wave, set in motion by the people, he hastened to get on the wave and was thus swept into office.

If he and others had not held up their trust bills and other side issues as substitutes for the commission the bill would doubtless have passed in 1889 and thus there would have been no need of a campaign in 1890 and there would have been no tidal wave. In that campaign I favored Gov. Throckmorton for the nomination until he withdrew from the race. I then went to the Hogg forces because a commission man had nowhere else to go.

But it is different now. The commission is here and here to stay. Were it otherwise Judge Clark in his speech at Belton committed himself squarely and unequivocally in favor of an effective commission to fix and to maintain rates of freight on the railroads, and this is all that any conservative commission man has ever asked or can ask. But Judge Clark believes that the people are competent to elect their railway commissioners and all other public officers that the official patronage of the governor is growing to be a dangerous power and ought not to exist in a Democratic state, and a large majority of the people fully agree with him.

As a commission man who "burned the bridges behind him" in this question long before some of our present great champions were ever heard to speak a word in its behalf. I have no fear that the commission will suffer with George Clark as the governor of our state.

Beyond all this every observing man must see that re-election of the present executive with his wild and radical schemes of agrarianism and confiscation means that we will erect a Chinese wall around the borders of our beloved state, hang the red flag on the outside, drive away immigration, defy enterprise, destroy confidence, discourage the investment of capital here, check the wheels of progress and set Texas back for years in development.

With all this train it follows that labor must go unemployed and poverty and unrest must be the portion of our people, and after all who is benefited? GEO. W. TYLER.

The New Plan.

The new plan of selling homes on the monthly installment plan, seems to meet a long felt want, at any rate it takes but a few minutes to convince a man who wants to buy that he is standing in his own "light," when he continues to pay house rent when it can be avoided. This plan that I have inaugurated gives the man of small means a chance. It don't require a big bank account to get a home. Last week I sold to three different parties homes in the city. One of them a two room house at $10.00 per month. Another a two room house at $12.50 per month, and the third a nice three room house for $17.50 per month. These are fair samples of what I am going to offer this week.

These places are all in a respectable neighborhood, close to the public schools and near the street cars, and not too far from the post office and center of business for them to be available. Come and see me, the longer you wait, the more you lose. JAMES I. MOORE.

MUSICAL.

Miss Rose and Mr. Renick at the Goggan Music Hall Last Night.

An audience composed nearly entirely of lovers of fine music, assembled at Goggan's Music hall last night to hear the recital by Miss Rose. The following programme was rendered in a style that won the highest praise for Miss Rose and Mr. Renick who so kindly assisted her:

Andante..... Beethoven
Capriccio..... Mendelssohn
Gavotte..... Godard

MISS ROSE,
Angels' Lullaby..... Seve
MR. RENICK.

Scherzo..... Chopin
Berceuse..... Chopin
Polonaise.....

MISS ROSE,
Fantasie..... Beriot
MR. RENICK.

Concerttude..... Liszt
Romance..... Rubinstein
Valse Caprice.....

Miss Rose's playing is exceptionally fine and is particularly so in staccato passages. The best work was done in the Andante by Beethoven, Gavotte by Godard and the Polonaise by Chopin. The two selections of Mr. Renick were highly appreciated and repeatedly applauded.
