Charge U. S. Revenue Collector With Graft
NEW YORK, June 2.—Hearing has been set for today before the United States Commissioner in the case of Christopher J. Fortman, who was arrested last month on the charge of demanding and accepting bribes from tobacco dealers in return for making false reports to the Government. Fortman was for ten years a Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. It is charged that he had collected an average of fifty dollars a week in "tips" from the tobacco men. His duty was to check up the returns made by about a hundred dealers each month.

The probe into the work of revenue collectors followed sensational charges made by tobacco dealers. A number of cigar manufacturers were arrested in March, charged with evasion of the internal revenue tax. It was claimed at the time that the government had been defrauded out of millions in taxes. The tobacco men fought back, through their lawyers, by charging that they had paid regularly for protection. The Treasury Department ordered a rigid investigation of the charges, and it was said that a number of government agents were involved.

Celebrates Centennial At Old Capital.

CORYDON, Ind., June 2.—The main celebration of Indiana's centennial opened here today, at the old State Capitol. Throughout the State celebrations are being held to commemorate the birth of the state. Corydon's celebration, however, and the first constitution was here that the first State capital was located and the first Constitution was drafted.

Among the notables who will speak during the two days of festivity are Governor Samuel Ralston, Congressman Herril Moore, grandson of the first Treasurer of the state, former Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks, former U. S. District Attorney Frank C. Bailey, and Russell P. Harrison, grandson of Governor Harrison.

The school children of Jeffersonville and New Albany have joined with those of this town in a pageant to be given today, and tomorrow five hundred children from Evansville will give their drills and folk dances on the green. The children will depict the early life and history of the town.

Corydon is rich in history, and many of the old landmarks remain to be viewed by the thousands of visitors who are flocking to the celebration. The old elm, known as the Constitution Elm, where it is said the members of the first legislature met and drafted the constitution, still stands, a giant in stature. The first state capital is in perfect preservation, and will stand for an other century. It is built of heavy limestone, quarried from the hills near town. It was erected in 1811 by Dennis Pennington, whose only surviving child, Mrs. Gratham, now 90 years old, is attending the centennial today.

The town received its name from the song "Corydon," a favorite of Gov. William Henry Harrison. When he made his regular trips to this county to look after his land and grist mill, he stopped with a family that was musically inclined. A daughter in the home was a sweet singer, and he always asked her to sing "Corydon." When the town was laid out, and Governor Harrison asked the family what it should be named, the young girl suggested "Corydon."

On June 10, 1816, the delegates to the first Constitutional Convention met here, at the then territorial capitol. In November of the same year, the legislature met here, and on December 11, 1816, the formal admission of Indiana into the Union took place.

The census bureau soon will issue the first tables of the kind ever prepared by the United States government, showing death rates and expectation of life at all ages for the population of the six New England states.

What The War Is Doing For The Farmer

The European war is not an unmitigated evil; nor yet is it an unmitigated blessing for this country. We shall not attempt to go into the ethical side of the question at all, nor shall we discuss "war brides," munition plants or other similar phases of the situation. We shall look at the war purely from the standpoint of prices for raw products and their products here in this country or imported from foreign countries. And of course when we consider raw products we must carry the subject further on into the matter of the prices we get and the prices we must pay for finished products. We shall consider our consideration, too, to those products which have their origin on the farm either in the raw state or finished and manufactured into edible or wearable articles.

Let us take wheat, for example. We all know that the war has put the price of wheat way up. Very well—this means that the whole country, city, town and rural population as well as paying more for their food—therefore the wheat raiser should theoretically be getting rich on a product which it costs him no more to raise than formerly and for which he gets more money.

But wait a minute—there are other things to consider in this matter of growing rich off of the war. Cotton and wool and meats and farm machinery and sugar have gone up too. This means that while the wheat raiser is getting more for his product, he is also paying more for the necessities of life. This cuts down somewhat on the profits the

GETTING THE MOST FROM COCA-COLA

Now Coca-Cola, as you know, is really an agricultural product—a product of the soil. Cane sugar—the very purest and finest—constitutes a large part of Coca-Cola syrup. As you know, sugar has gone way up—so every glass of Coca-Cola you drink makes some farmer's heart gladder.

So it is with the pure fruit juices that, combined, produce the delightful flavor of Coca-Cola. Not so much in quantity as in quality when you consider a single glass of this delicious beverage, but enormous when the entire Coca-Cola output is considered.

Yet this product of nature—the farmer—increased in cost though it has been to the farmer, has not been raised one penny in price to dealer—or to you. The price at the soda fountain and in the bottle has not risen one iota.

Now inasmuch as the rural population alone of America consumes millions of bottles and glasses of Coca-Cola every year, you and the other agriculturists of this country will not only be able to continue to please your palates and get delicious refreshment with this beverage at no increased cost, but you will be sending back to the farm bigger profits and more money at no greater expense to yourself.
