BLOODY WORK

Fighting Between a North Texas Mob and Officers of the Town.

Negro Boz for the Protection of Whites.

General order was given by the town marshal that no negroes were to be allowed to enter the Mexican Mess. During the night, a negro was found trying to enter the building and was asked by the officers to leave. The negro refused to leave and was shot by the officers.

In the morning, a mob gathered outside the Mexican Mess and began to throw stones and other objects at the building. The officers, who were guarding the building, opened fire on the mob and killed four of them.

The bodies of the four negroes were taken by the officers and placed in the town hall. The officers then notified the police department and the coroner's jury was called.

The coroner's jury was called and an inquest was held. The coroner's jury found that the negroes were killed in self-defense and that the officers were justified in shooting them.

In conclusion, it was found that the negroes were killed in self-defense and that the officers were justified in shooting them. The officers were not charged with any crime.
