

PAULIST FATHERS PLAN NEW HOUSE

Brookland college, 19 young men newly enrolled, making a total student body of about 60. These young men study to be missionaries, the object of them to convert Protestants in the Paulist task of making America Catholic. Others go into dioceses in the west and south, to work under bishops. Usually Catholic missionaries of this type work under superiors of religious orders. Paulists undertake to supply a need for men that is felt by the diocesan bishops.

The number of colleges and houses of studies surrounding the Catholic university at Brookland steadily increases. Following closely after the Paulists were the Franciscans, with their commissariat and college of the Holy Land, where American young men are taught to serve at Palestine shrines, and next came the Sisters of Notre Dame, with their Trinity college. There are now Holy Cross college, a part of the great Catholic institution at Notre Dame, Ind., the house of studies and novitiate of the Mariet Fathers, and the Missionaries of the Divine Love. The Paulists were founders of the Catholic Missionary union and it is a factor in the present plan to unite all Catholic missionary agencies in America.

CHURCH NEWS BUREAUS IN LARGER CITIES PLANNED

Christian leaders are proposing, as part of their publicity plans, the founding of Church News associations in various cities. These associations are not to be formed to furnish free matters to newspapers, but to deal in church news, local and general, on a financial basis. Search is making for trained men, not ministers, to collect and distribute news, and far more important is to be attached to the reporting than to the editorial end. That is, news is to be news and not mere opinions. Cities wherein efforts are already making include Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, and St. Louis. These are selected, not wholly for their size, but because of location in them of headquarters of various large religious bodies. They are therefore news centers. It may be added that New York is already provided with such association, successful financially, but conducted as others are, not for profit but to demonstrate for churches an efficiency plan that supports itself and is not a drain upon charity.

Religious weeklies giving more and more attention to general matters of their respective bodies and less to news. It is proposed as a further part of the new plan, to establish eventually local church newspapers, conducted also on a business basis, and carrying local and general church news. These are to be separated by religious bodies, but in business ways to be federated. In large measure they are to replace the magazine organs of missionary and other societies, which cost a lot of money and reach few people beyond present contributors. Above all the new localized periodicals are to carry information, but to be free from appeals and arguments. The old idea of church leaders, that newspapers ought to publish church news to help Christianity has vanished. The whole plan is based on merit and economics, and as rapidly as it can be carried out the church leaders say the flooding of editors with free matter is to come to an end.
