Planning Million Dollar Road.

Riverhead, L. I., May 7.—An important meeting is being held in the court house here today by the state highway commission, which desires to get the views of the country residents on the definite location of the proposed state road to be built through both sides of the county wholly at state expense.

This road is known officially as Route No. 35. The route as proposed by the commission begins at a point on the dividing line between Nassau and Queens counties, running easterly through the northern portion of Nassau county to the dividing line between that county and Suffolk; thence easterly by way of the Jericho turnpike to Smithton Branch, St. James, Port Jefferson and Wading River, to Riverhead; thence southerly by way of the state road already built between Riverhead and Quogue, to the latter village; thence westerly by way of the South Country road to Patchogue, Sayville, Islip, Babylon, Bay Shore and Amityville, to a point on the dividing line between Nassau and Suffolk counties yet to be determined; and still thence westerly through the southerly portion of Nassau county to a point on the dividing line between the counties of Nassau and Queens yet to be determined, making a state road all the way around Long Island.

It is roughly figured by people here, something estimated with road building, that the cost will be between $700,000 and $1,000,000, although it is believed that the expense will be warranted because of the great public convenience of a high class road and the way that will increase the value of adjacent realty.

Geraniums, Elephant Ear, Rosen, Cannas, Coleus, Salvia, Petunias, Border Plants, Asters, Feverfew, Verbena, Phlox, Carnations, Plumbago, Sweet Alyseum and chrysanthemums should be planted at once. We have them. Bird Forrest.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence: Washington, D. C., May 2.—How ever Texans may differ among themselves in their personal estimates of Senator Bailey, I can not doubt that every one of them will feel an especial pride in the magnificent speech delivered by the senator early last week in support of his proposed income tax amendment to the pending tariff bill. It is the one speech made in either house of congress on the pending bill that rises above the ordinary, and it was an effort eminently worthy of the best debates ever heard in the senate. In an incidental way, the senator discussed, in the beginning of his argument, the democratic idea of a constitutional tariff, levied for the chief purpose of revenue, but the burden of his speech was the income tax. It was, by general admission, at once the ablest and most thorough discussion of that subject ever heard in congress, and it will be freely used, I have no doubt, as a reference in the future discussions of that subject in the years to come.

He was favored with a splendid audience. Besides a full senate, there was a large membership of the house present, and crowded galleries; and he not only held this audience during the three hours of his discussion on the first day, but they returned and heard him attentively for an equal length of time on the second day, which he devoted to a close legal analysis of the various decisions of the supreme court upon this subject since that court was established. The senator had studied his subject well and handled himself admirably. Republican senators on the opposite side of the question interrupted him occasionally, at first, but these were disposed of so easily and so effectively that such interruptions came at rarer intervals as he proceeded. This speech added much to Senator Bailey's already high reputation as a great lawyer, a finished orator and an accomplished debater.

Both sides are figuring closely on the coming vote on the income tax amendment. At least fifteen republican votes are claimed for it, and it is confidently asserted that if all the democrats cast their votes for it, the senate will adopt it. The attendance upon the senate is now larger and more regular than before in years. According to the "whips," who are keeping daily tally, all the republican senators and all the democrats, except one, are here, and are expected to remain until the tariff bill is finally disposed of.

Little progress was made last week with the consideration of the tariff bill, unless it is counted something to have done with the speeches made during that time. Aside from the speeches by Senator Bailey, Senator Rayner of Maryland and perhaps one or two others, this discussion had been most remarkable for the fact that the speeches in favor of lower rates of duty have been made by republicans, while the speeches in support of protective duties have been principally by democrats. The political wires have become singularly crossed. The democrats from the south, especially are careful to declare that the rates they are advocating, on lumber, sugar and other articles of southern production, are strictly revenue rates, but they are no lower than the rates now prevailing on those articles. The republican "free trade" speeches are made in favor of free lumber, principally.

The movement in favor of tariff revision, which compelled both the democratic and republican parties to promise such revision to the people last year in their platforms, may fairly be attributed to the agitation among New England protectionist manufacturers in favor of free raw materials, principally hides and coal; to agitation throughout the middle west in favor of free lumber; to the demand of the newspapers of the country, great and small, for the removal of the tariff from wood pulp and print paper, and to the general demand, in all parts of the country, for lower duties on the products of iron and steel. These were the influential forces that created the sentiment responsible for the present effort to revise the tariff; and in each particular instance disappointment is to follow. Through the persistent efforts, principally, of Senators Elkins and Scott of West Virginia, the duty on coal, struck out by the house, will be restored by the senate; the influential senators from Maine will not stand for the removal of duties on wood pulp and paper; the republican senators of the far northwest and the democratic senators of the south will defeat free lumber; the western men will make sure of the retention of the duty on hides, while those from many states will unite to save iron and steel from any serious cut. When the pending bill shall finally pass, it will be a more thorough and up-to-date protective measure than the existing law, known as the Dingley bill, with an average rate of duties but little lower, if lower at all, than existing rates. There can, therefore, be no very appreciable reduction in the cost of living, though the readjustment may possibly produce more revenue for the government. The senators in charge of the bill, with Aldrich at their head, make no pretense of denying that it is anything else than a protective measure, and challenge the popular impression that there was to be a general downward revision of rates. There will also be some improvement in the administrative features of the law, especially with a view to suppressing custom house frauds and preventing the undervaluation of imported goods. From the latter it is expected a very considerable increase in revenue will result. But the case of the "ultimate consumer" has yet to be considered, and his cause may figure largely in subsequent campaigns.

Senator Dolliver's recent outspoken declaration in favor of lower duties than those proposed in the pending bill caused surprise on both sides of the chamber. The late Senator Allison was a conservative on the tariff, and during his lifetime since the death of Allison, however, the "Iowa Idea," first advanced by Hon. Albert B. Cummins, who has now become Allison's successor here, has become dominant in that state, it is understood, and will command recognition from other members of the Iowa delegation.

Senator Culberson, chairman, and Senator Owen, secretary of the democratic caucus of senators, are unusually busy now, in rounding up that body for the voting on the pending tariff bill, which is expected to begin very soon. If the solid democratic vote can be polled, some victories can be won, with the assistance of western republican senators, as the bill makes progress through the senate.

Senator Gore, the blind man from Oklahoma, rather distinguished himself in a running debate in the senate on Tuesday, when he became involved in sharp conflict with Scott and Elkins of West Virginia and McCumber of North Dakota, with regard to the merits of a protective tariff, and especially as to its effect upon wages. He was well posted on facts and was quick and bright in debate. As a stump speaker he can have few superiors in the senate. Gore once lived in Ellis county, and the Hon. Jack Beall had some experience on the stump with him, when the blind man was a leader of the populist element of that part of Texas.

Col. Sam W. Fordyce, the former president of the Cotton Belt railroad, was in the city recently for a few days. He and Mrs. Fordyce spent the past winter near Brownsville where the colonel is interested in a railroad and a big ranch. Col. Fordyce spoke to me most cordially of Judge Dunlap of Waxahachie, whom he is glad to number among his Texas friends. E. L. G.

20 CONTRACTS Alloted for Waxahachie

Corsicana, Texas, April 18, 1909.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

After spending eight days in the Pecos Valley, and looking at the land, orchards, meadows, wells, lakes, dams, crops, live stock, and the good class of people, I have decided that the Pecos Valley is the "Garden Spot" of America. Price of land often doubles in one year. Alfalfa and fruits pay from $50.00 to $100.00 per acre per annum. Land is now selling from $60.00 to $500.00 per acre, and I believe, judging by the past, will double in one or two years.

I do not find much difference in the soil and products between Barstow, Texas, and Roswell, New Mexico. It is all good, and destined to become the greatest fruit, grape and apple land in the United States.

I consider Pecos Valley land, at present prices, the best investment opportunities in our country, and the climate and altitude just right for health and happiness.
