Miss Mabel Harrison will be the bridesmaid, and the best man will be L. W. Howell. The couple will make their home in El Paso after a wedding trip east. They will visit Pittsburgh, Leutaville and Indianapolis.

THE MANICURE LADY

By WILLIAM F. KIRK. "THE latest bug Wilfred has went and got," said the Manicure Lady. "He is full in love with a picture in the back part of a magazine. It is the picture of a young lady stenographer sitting at her typewriter, and she is a pretty kind of a doll at that, but don't you see, George, it is only a photograph, and Wilfred don't even know whether she can speak English good or not. I don't see how a grown up man can fall in love with a picture until he has fall in love with the original, but he is as moonzy as I have ever saw him, and tugs that there ad around, calling it his wondrous dream girl."

"What's the use of falling in love with her if he don't know her name, and can't locate her?" asked the practical Head Barber. "Right, George," agreed the Manicure Lady. "That is just what Mayme and me was telling him, but he says that to a poet beauty is more divine than reality, and just keeps on raving about that picture. He says 'poet is always looking for the unattainable, or what-ever he called it, something mystic and beyond. And that is why he loves that fool picture he cut out of the ad.'"

"His case is kind of hopeless any way we can figure it, George, because even if he should happen to locate the original of this photograph, it's a ten to one shot that she would be looking out of the window when he proposed to her, because my poor brother ain't got no fatal beauty to spare and no bankroll with which to win a trusting heart with. So all we can hope for is that he will get over this love craze of his and forget her, the same as he has forgot a lot of other dames that he thought he loved extravagant."

"I suppose he has wrote a poem to his new love," said the Head Barber, anticipating the worst. "That was one of the first things he done," replied the Manicure Lady. "It is called 'To My Wondrous Dream Love,' and this is the way it sounds: 'Wondrous dream love, Don't forget me, Don't it seem, love, Like you've met me? I'm so lonely, O'er your photo, If I only, Know where to go to, I have missed you, Your cheeks so pink, But they taste Like printer's ink, If I knew, Just where to go I'd love you, And not your photo.'"

German Alpinist Breaks Leg; Almost Starves in Hut Before Help Comes

Geneva, Switzerland, July 25.—German Alpinist of Munich has just had a terrible experience on the Roonpaas, 7200 feet high in the Canton of Glarus. He set out alone for Weissteinen a week ago to cross the pass and descend to Elm. While struggling in deep snow near the summit of the pass, he broke his leg, but managed to crawl to the Alpine hut, 500 yards away. He remained there seven days and nights, during which he ate up his meager tinined provisions. When discovered accidentally by a Swiss wood cutter, he was starving and had eaten part of his boots. Several peasants with a stretcher climbed the pass and brought down the Alpinist to the valley, where it is hoped that he will recover.

What the Dry Cleaner Must Know

To Accomplish Faultless Dry Cleaning Most people think little knowledge is necessary, but as a matter of fact, in order to accomplish the results you demand, years of experience and study are required. We must know more about materials than the retail merchant—as much of the chemical action of fluids on colors as the manufacturer of the material. We have expert knowledge of fabrics from oriental rugs to light weight silks, of feathers and furs, laces, etc. Can you imagine how any one but an expert can handle your order?
