Our Greatest April Suit Sale Over A Thousand Suits In Wonderful Styles

Today Is Southern Memorial Day--

FOUR women in April, 1862, at Arlington Cemetery one year after the fall of Fort Sumpter, were the first to begin Memorial Day, when they decorated the graves of a number of soldiers buried at Arlington Heights, Virginia.

The next year they did the same lovely service and the year after the same sad duty at Fredericksburg.

Thereafter the service gradually became general, several State Legislatures and veteran soldier organizations recommending it.

So as we pause a moment on this Southern Memorial Day, we say—Hallowed be the spot where lies the precious dust of the heroes who laid down their lives for their flag.

Graduation Suits For Young Men

WISE OLD "PROFS" IN PHYSICS have declared that this old world of ours is made up of vibrations of different degrees of intensity—if so, we have corraled the classiest bunch of vibrations in the way of clothes that ever graced this planet. They were produced by a house that has a "Rep" for making distinctive clothes for young men.

Just a little tip as to "what's what" in style for the season. Striped patterns predominate in Saxouys, Flannels and Worsteds, and the always popular Blue Serges.

Coats are a trifle longer this season, snug-fitting with high waist lines. The biggest change is in the lapels which are considerably narrower, most lapels being of the pointed type, known as peak lapels in the clothing world. Belted-back coats are fast swinging into popular favor and will be worn more than ever by high school and college men.

We would advise you to drop in some day after classes and see these new arrivals. Our courteous treatment and intelligence, backed by quality merchandise, have made our store Clothing Headquarters for High School and College Men. Prices range $10 To $20

WE CALL YOUR PARTICULAR ATTENTION—To the exceptional showing of Blue Serge Suits for you young fellows. Come in tomorrow and ask to see "The Popular Special," at $12.50

(We Have Others Up to $35).

Machine Crumples and Falls

Suddenly the propeller stopped revolving and the machine fell, crumpling the plane's left wing and sending the two fliers in a debris on the mountain slope 400 feet below. How long they remained that way even the men themselves did not know. But finally they extricated themselves and found that their injuries, while painful, were minor.

Atmosphere Burns in Plane

With but emergency rations taken from the wrecked plane and a few swallows of water, the men, after firing their plane, started for the American camp. They walked all that day, all that night, and they walked at the next day and well into the fourth.

Climb Two Mountain Ranges

Over two mountain ranges they climbed, through rock defiles and over trails from which jagged bits of rock protruded, knife sharp and rainous to the feet. Their water gave out, but they found a little alkaline bog wallow, and after the pump had been moved, they drank the fill and pushed forward again.

Tongues Blacken

Under the heat of the sun their tongues began to blacken and swell and their feet ached and throbbled. Bits of "hardtack" from the emergency rations crumbled into fine powder in their mouths from lack of saliva to dissolve it.

Began to Have Hallucinations

"And then Willis and Dargue began to have hallucinations," said the man who brought the story to Columbus. "One of them—I forgot which—told me that out of the dark fabric of the mountain came a light, which he believed was that of a locomotive. He said that the ray shifted and vanished, reappeared and grew bigger and finally focused on a far off point. Then there were the balloons and the balloons of American soldiers and the balloons broke that at times they believed surrounded them."

Final Water by Accident

Through the baffling mountain passes they made their way always keeping in mind that their next sight would be the infested village. Finally, thirst drove them into the cañons of a town, determined to steal water if possible, if not to fight for it. As they entered the town a passing horseman caused them to jump into a clump of cottonwoods for safety, and there at their feet ran a clear mountain spring, alkaline, but drinkable.

Rest Two Minutes, Push On

Again they pushed on, with a halt of two minutes for rest. They could not stop longer for fear that to do so would mean at least a day's delay, and perhaps victims for the long baked cultures that began to wheel in the sky above them.

After 48 Hours, through the clearing mist, the two fliers came upon the American advanced front camp, sprawling its length over a hill top. Here their wounds were treated and their reports—for it was to make reports they were sent—were delivered.

New Planes Not Much Better

Aviators testing the new planes here for expeditionary service ascertained that while the new planes have a larger wing spread than the old machines, they lack the same horsepower and consequently are unadapted to flying in the high altitudes of northern Mexico.

Salping All Along Line

Intermittent sniping continues all along the American line of communication, according to reports of returning truckmen.

VILLISTA GENERAL RELEASED ON HABEAS CORPUS HEARING

Jose Valles, said to be a former Villa general, was released from custody Tuesday afternoon on a habeas corpus proceedings sued out by Lanning & Bowen, his attorneys, before Judge P. B. Price in the 31st district court.
