babies here and she suggested me asking if I had found a child for her. I told her about the advertisement. We walked to a spot near my home where she left me.

"The grandmother insisted that it must be legally adopted. I asked her what she called him and she said 'It makes no difference, call him John Doe.' So that was the only name I knew for the baby. Mrs. Jones refused to legally adopt the child because she said that a woman who would nurse her child a month and give it up would not hesitate to take it when it got old enough to give her pleasure. Finally Mrs. Collins agreed to give it up without papers. She asked me to call for it and gave me 10 cents for taxi fare to come to her home. I went there at 1:30 p. m. and the baby was placed in my arms."

Here the witness testified regarding the baby's adoption.

EL PASO HERALD

After many years of litigation, Oregon street will be opened between Seventh and the canal. The property owners on Oregon street have petitioned the council three times in the last 18 years in open Oregon street, in answering the property owners when the last petition was presented some time ago, the council must subscribe $1000, and the city would provide the remainder.

After the birth of the child, Mrs. Jones, who lived in California, I would not know her now if I saw her, but she was small Aunt Mary Jones, a negro woman, who is in New Mexico now, usually goes to her mother when the children were born. Mrs. Jones attended her when Bruce was born.

Describing the death of Mary Estelle, a child which lived only one month and three days, the witness said, in answer to her husband's questions: "She choked in my arms. Then you took her and placing your mouth over her mouth, blew into her lungs. She died, however, after you had revived her in this manner twice. Your sickness was a result of infection from this baby. It later developed into epilepsy. Within a week I asked you if you didn't think I was going to have another baby and you said 'no, silly, we'll be swamped. How many will we have like this?'"

Witness testified that she had killed herself in trying to do things for Bruce.

Testifies to Birth of Child. Peralee Jones, 211 East Third street, a negro woman, testified to attending Mrs. McConnell at the birth of the child which is the object of the litigation. "I was for Mrs. McConnell," she testified. "On the night of May 9, 1919, a messenger came for me and told me to go to Mrs. McConnell's house. I went. She was on the floor in the kitchen by a trunk. A baby was born there. She asked me to help her out. There was no physician there. I helped her some and then washed the baby. Mrs. McConnell was sick in the front room at the time. After the baby was born Mrs. McConnell went to another room and went to bed. I am positive that the child was born there."

Teacherage Proposed for School at Ysleta. The establishment of "teacherage" throughout the country is being considered more and more seriously. El Paso district, according to Miss Mrs. Winkler, county superintendent of schools, who is in charge of the plans suggested for the purpose of providing a teachers' home in Ysleta similar to the one at Cloudcroft. The greatest difficulty in obtaining and retaining the seven teachers for the school at Ysleta is the lack of proper living conditions for them, making it necessary for them to live in El Paso and increase the expense by the interurban fares, Miss Winkler said. The plans for the home, though tentative as yet, provide that it be furnished rent free to the teachers who would then have as their living expenses only food and a housekeeper or servant to cook the meals and do the housework. Benefit entertainments given throughout the year by the Parent-Teachers' association of the Ysleta school have netted $390, which has been expended for playground equipment.
