"Not Those Who Own Their Own Homes!" say we.

Statistics prove that a far greater degree of marital felicity exists among home owners than among renters, forced to shift from place to place.

Many things go into the making of a real home; first of all, the SPIRITUAL ELEMENT, the atmosphere that goes out from the father and mother, the unconscious teaching, the moral and mental influence that gives strength, resolution and character to children, all through their lives.

Besides the spiritual side of family life, and necessary to that side, is the material life and surroundings that extend from the front door to the top floor, down again, and out to the back door.

Comfort, without foolish ostentation, the atmosphere, affectionate, sincere, loyal, and artistic, that make the home always thought of and forever remembered, must depend to a large extent upon material surroundings.

The family that owns its home is unworried as to the future, hence happier in the present. There is something about home-ownership that strengthens the marriage tie and makes for domestic tranquility.

If you doubt this, let us give you a list of those who have purchased homes from us. Their character and standing in the community will prove that home ownership and happiness go hand in hand.

"Few Married Couples Happy," Asserts Judge

(By International News Service)

NEW YORK (AP)—A judge says that very few married couples are really happy. He said that in a separation case he made a last-minute effort to effect a reconciliation between a man and his wife before the case was taken for decision.

Henry H. Schmitt and his wife, the judge said, had been separated for some time. Schmitt brought suit for a separation, alleging cruel and inhuman treatment. The wife was met with a charge of adultery.

"I do not think that these people have been as really happy as I have an idea that very few married couples are really happy," said the judge. "But they have not along fairly well for fourteen years and still parted after a sharp quarrel."

"I am not going to try to force them to live together, but this is a separation, along together and both to a good business during fourteen years of married life. My impression is that they are not happy."
