William Kelly Talks

About Brownsville to Washington Paper—His Agent Posts Him About Rice Crop.

Washington Post.

One of the representative men of the Rio Grande country, Mr. William Kelly, a banker of Brownsville, Tex., is at the Hotel Barton. Mr. Kelly is a gentleman of wealth and much influence on the border, where he settled after the close of the Civil war. He is heavily interested in silver mines in Mexico, and on the Texas side has large plantations and cattle ranches.

"My town of Brownsville," said he, "is for its importance perhaps the most isolated place in the United States, as we are 160 miles from the nearest railroad station. The country about it, on both sides of the Rio Grande, is in the semi-arid district, and often the lack of rainfall brings distress on our people. But the future of the region looks bright, and everybody is in good spirits. The outlook is that our entire valley, including many hundred thousand acres of land, will at no distant day be one of the great rice-producing belts of the Union. This year, as my agent informs me, we are going to produce twenty-two to twenty-four bags of rice to the acre, which is far in excess of the yield of that crop in Louisiana and Eastern Texas. There is nothing to do but to take the water from the river and put it on the land; irrigation is the magic word that is going to make this part of our State blossom like the rose."

HELL LOCATED.

An editor works 365 1-4 days per year to get out 52 issues of his paper—that's labor. Once in a while some one pays him a year's subscription—that's capital; and once in a while some dead beat takes the paper a year or two without paying for it—that's anarchy. But later on justice will overtake this last named creature, for there is a place where he will get his just deserts—that's hell.—Exchange.
