While the onion yield in this section has been somewhat below what was anticipated in many cases, others instances have exceeded expectations. One notable case is that of C. H. Nobles, who has about six or eight acres in onions. From a small plot of land about twelve feet square, nineteen crates of onion were gathered, averaging sixty-two pounds per crate, and the balance of the crop is said to be just as good. While all onion growers have not been so fortunate, many farms have given splendid yield.

A HERALD man was today shown a sample of Irish potatoes grown by Dr. Bell near town, which compare favorably with those shipped from Colorado or elsewhere. The man who said Irish potatoes do not do well here ought to come back and see not only the sample shown by Dr. Bell, but also note the success of many other growers in this section.
