The case of George Z. Lamb and others as executors of the will of David W. Grant, against Enutte and Rosalind Grant was tried in the district court on Saturday and Judge Call now has it under advisement. It was a suit to set aside the deed of Mr. Grant on the ground that certain undue influences had been used in securing it. He deemed his home to his minor daughter Rosalind.

The people of River Heights are now rejoicing for they have a political identity of their own as a result of the decision of Judge Call in segregating the Providence Town Corporation territory and making two precincts instead of one. River Heights secured about one half of the Providence territory, it asked for but this will be sufficient to make quite a respectable precinct.

Three horses were killed by the O. L. & I. Railroad Company on Sunday evening while coming into town from the north. Two of the horses had strayed into the private right of way of the company and were killed. The other horse was killed at the intersection of Sixth North and Main street. A young man from Benson ward by the name of Buehler was coming west on Sixth North street. He had the side curtains of his buggy down and did not see the approaching car. The conductor thought the driver was turning before crossing the track and did not stop quick enough to avoid hitting the horse which was so badly maimed that he was killed. The young man in the rig escaped uninjured.

Futile Aspiration. "When I was a boy I thought I'd rather be a great baseball player than anything else in the world." "Of course, you have changed your mind." "Not exactly. I've merely realized that there is no 3020."

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF DR.'S WIFE

Inquest Is Demanded by the Physician. Woman in Ill Health, But Was Improving

Salt Lake, Nov. 29.—Mrs. Elizabeth M. Marshall, 35 years of age, wife of Dr. H. D. Marshall, formerly surgeon for the D. & R. G. rail road at Greenriver, Utah, shot and killed herself at 11:50 o'clock yesterday morning at a downtown hotel, in the room occupied by herself and husband. She died almost instantly.

Whether death was the result of accident, or design on the part of the woman to end her life, is a matter of conjecture. No one saw the shooting. Mrs. Marshall having been alone in the room at the time the shot was fired. A bullet from a 38 caliber revolver, purchased for her by her husband, penetrated the woman's brain, entering the skull about an inch and a half behind the right ear. Officers investigating the case inclined to the belief that Mrs. Marshall committed suicide, but Dr. Marshall is confident that her death was accidental. He has demanded an inquest and the question will be decided by Dr. Samuel G. Paul, health commissioner, this morning.

Was in Poor Health

Mrs. Marshall had been in poor health for more than a year. She and her husband had an appointment at noon yesterday with Dr. Ernest Van Cott, her physician. Dr. Marshall says that after a late breakfast his wife finished dressing, putting on her hat, veil and scarf shawl; that about ten minutes to noon his wife sent him down the hall on an errand that did not require a minute; that just as he was returning, and within ten feet of the door, he heard the shot, but believed it to be an auto tire exploding until he reached the door of their room and saw his wife lying on the floor, the revolver lying a few feet from the body.

Examination of the body of Mrs. Marshall showed that there were no powder burns on the scalp and the hair and clothing were not blackened or singed. It is incredible, says Dr. Marshall, that she could have purposely fired the shot without placing the muzzle of the gun so near her head as to burn the hair or clothing.

Priceless Treasures of Europe and Wonderful Relics of the Orient Shown In the Vast Exhibit Palaces—Interesting Characters From Every Land on Earth Entertain the Visitors.

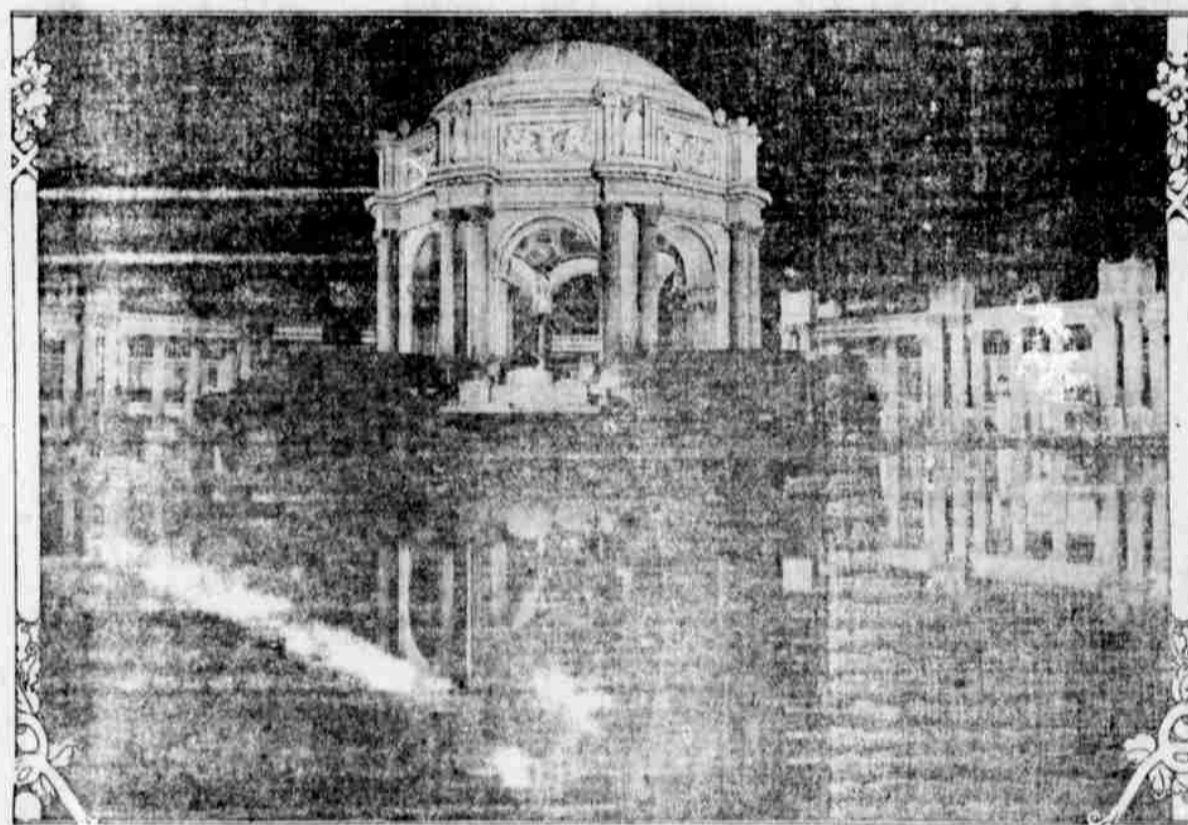

THERE are any number of exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition which relate directly to the facts and fictions bearing upon the present world situation, exhibits which are full of historic interest and which bear witness to the tragedies and romances which center around a battlefield.

There is no more interesting exhibit at the Exposition than that of the Bal-con of seventeen different diplomas from various of the world's greatest educational institutions, including the University of Paris, the University of Jena and the University of Leipzig. Twenty-two different languages is another of his acquisitions. He is a sociable being and is quite willing to tell of his wanderings and beliefs. An hour with him is well worth while and costs nothing. He has a marvelously interesting manuscript, which he says is his trans-and potteries and brasses and rare broderies to be found here. It is no just enough to pass this booth by casually. In order to see it thoroughly one must become acquainted with the attendants who will open up a hidden store of antiquities and display them for your delectation. Also they are quite willing to tell you the history of the strange looking gods which are everywhere to be seen.

THE GREATEST GLORY OF THE EXPOSITION, THE PALACE OF FINE ARTS, TO BE SAVED.

PLANS are under way in San Francisco to preserve the splendid Palace of Fine Arts as a legacy of the world's most beautiful Exposition. This splendid building rivals any architectural creation of present or past eras. It was pronounced by Lord Richard Neville, ambassador of King George of England, as one of the two most beautiful buildings in the world, the other being the Taj Mahal, in India.

kan States, in the Palace of Varied Industries. It is a collection of jewels, bronzes and objects d'art brought from Montenegro, Roumania, Servia, Bulgaria and Albania, articles which have been bartered in tears by their owners in order that the profit may be turned to the better account of their beloved countries. Here is an exquisite chain of vari-colored sapphires, white, yellow and red, worth a thousand times their weight in gold. It once belonged to a beautiful Montenegrin princess, who parted with it to help the Red Cross fund in Montenegro at the time of the Balkan war. There is a handsome royal Austrian dinner service. Many times has it graced the smoking board of a prince of the royal house of Hapsburg, who lost his life on the battlefield of Belgium.

In one of the carefully guarded glass cases is a marvelous snuffbox of gold and rubies. It belonged to Abdul Hamid and found daily use in the royal pocket. When he was dethroned it was confiscated, along with other of his personal loot, and disposed of by the Turkish government. It was purchased by a Servian noble who was killed in the Balkan war. His family, wishing to do all that was possible toward a war fund for their beloved country, disposed of it, along with many other valuables, and so it has found its way to the exposition. One wonderful old Madras tea set has a history several centuries long. It was once the property of a prince of India. During the time of the English occupation he was one of the many oriental potentates who lost caste and title. Ultimately he was shot for treason and his property taken over by the authorities. In diverse ways it traveled through India to Persia, where it was purchased by an American girl in Teheran. This young American afterward became the wife of a Servian count. When the crisis came a year ago last August and the resources of Servia were drained to their dregs this loyal little lady disposed of every heirloom the family possessed and all of her own personal trinkets and treasures in order that she might do her best for the country of her adoption.

In the Palace of Education there is a Persian Buddhist, a bishop of the Buddhist church, who passed twenty years of his life in Lassa learning the mysteries of being. Mazzinista is his name. He claims ninety odd years and looks about sixty. After taking a degree at Oxford he returned to India, where he went through other processes of initiation and can truthfully boast position, filled as they are with the atmosphere of the most ancient of empires, one feels the touch of a hand that is soon to be stilled and breathe the air of lands filled with a romance and a wonder that is all too soon to be dissipated by the more practical, but less poetic sway of western civilization. All of which is reason for the magnetic qualities of these oriental nooks toward exposition centers.

INVENTORS EDISON AND FORD IN A COAL MINE AT THE EXPOSITION

THOMAS ALVA EDISON, world famous inventor, and Henry Ford, millionaire automobile manufacturer, inspecting the Rock Springs (Wyo.) coal mine in the Palace of Mines and Metallurgy at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Mr. W. E. Dickson is seen with a piece of coal in his hand. Back of Mr. Edison is Mr. Edward Seidle, superintendent of the mine exhibit. This mine is placed beneath the floors of the Palace of Mines and Metallurgy at the Exposition and is daily visited by many thousands.
