

the way in which some of the dressiest of the little costumes are trimmed, but though of the most flower-like delicacy, the new colors are enduring.

FOR VERY YOUNG PEOPLE.

There are solid piques in sky blue and apple blossom pink that make smart and useful summer suits for maids from 4 to 10.

White Hamburg embroideries in edging and insertion trim the reefer coats of these appropriately, outlining big turn back revers and elaborate cape collars, and edging or simulating cuffs for the sleeves.

The plain skirts have usually strapped seams, and for the oldest ages are cut to hang in front with a suggestion of the grown up box plait.

Pink pique is also used for small gentlemen in the baby stages, and takes the shape of cape cloaks and mannish little suits consisting of a reefer coat and knitted skirt.

Blue being a girl's color the sky blue pique is not used for boys. In white pique, duck linen—homespun and brown linen—which may be said to be a universal material this season—there are any number of neat and inexpensive coat and skirt suits that can be bought ready made for the boys and girls. Russian crash, a stoutish grayish blue linen has much of the look of kitchen crash is in high favor for rough summer use for both sexes.

CRASH SUITS.

A plain skirt and reefer coat is the model for girls in this material, which appears as well in natty little bloomers and blouse for bicycle use.

For young gentlemen up to 10 there are material suits in the Russian crash that with their long blue trousers and very low neck blouses have quite a professional sailor air.

Great sailor collars appear on these, the proper caper is to have the shield front perfectly plain, though the shields of other material suits show anchors and braids of contrasting colors. Course hemp watch chains, drawn taut across the breast from two patch pockets on the blouse, are a genuine "salt" finish to these serviceable suits.

FROCKS OF BATISTE.

But chief among the sensible textures used for girls of almost all ages are the linen batistes and grass linens in every shade of sage and brown. These copy in smaller patterns all the designs of the day, the open gulfure insertions, crinkled ribbon stripes and embroidered dots and figures.

Trimmings for these little frocks are likewise grown up to a degree. White girls, though many delightful little toilets are still seen in pure white.

PARISIAN MODELS.

The French models in particular evidence a leaning toward color, and there are Indian dainty and batiste costumes showing Dresden effects that are extremely charming.

With sheer white textiles, mulls, Swisses, plain batiste and Indian lawns, there are often linings of colored silk with waist and shoulder knots of ribbon to match. A summer cloak of white dotted Swiss lined with pink, rose or blue silk, is a novelty for girls from 10 to 12.

There are also Swisses with pink and blue dots that with dainty decorations of lace and rosettes of satin ribbon appear in gowns and cloaks, shirred sun hats, and poke bonnets.

The dressiest costumes for girls under 6 are made very short, reaching barely to the knee. In the Paris models the majority of these are higher necked and long sleeved with a dashing little bunching of the shaped skirt breadths at the back to give the look of a bustle being worn.

SENSIBLE STYLES.

More practical designs, however, are shown, composed of the full gathered skirt—simply hemmed or with a four-inch linen lawns, cambrics and percales that come well or worse, appear every year.

For country use many mothers are having frocks made for the small fry of the new madras ginghams, which in delicate blue, green and pink stripes, are in weaves of extreme fineness.

A washable material for sailor collars and revers of chevot, serge and flannel suits is a thick linen canvas that comes in white and color, and it will be found in smart and useful models for all ages between 12 and 17.

The plain skirt and belted blouse are of the serge, the wrinkled sleeves, gump and bretelles of the linen.

Sunbonnets for small girls are more than ever plentiful this season, as are also dainty frilled and lace trimmed aprons in all degrees of dressiness.

A "rag" bonnet, made of striped and checked ginghams and is delightfully quaint over round serious little faces.

The poke revival is shown in others in plain chambrays, and these, as well as the sun hats in the same materials, are shirred over cords and have often revers of lace and bows of ribbon.

Poke bonnets for dressy use run much to rough straw crowns and frilled gauze fronts with plain trimmings of old maid roses and white ostrich feathers.

Last but not least leather belts will be worn by both boys and girls. Then, since French children are wearing socks, black or white socks, as well as for their baby brothers.

hem and three tucks—and low necked, short sleeve body long in favor.

Elaborate gumps of mill and lace, with long bishop sleeves, are supplied for these.

Then, with this expanse of white, the little colored gown will be further relieved by a bib or bertha fall of the same.

Made in this way there are some delightful little costumes in dimities, organdies and French muslins to be found ready made in the shops. Yellow Valenciennes lace and plain and point d'esprit footings are the edgings most used on the gumps and bodice decorations.
