THE CLIMBERS

By Bert Leston Taylor.

When Jack and Jill were wedded, they
Were seemingly content
With what, in a less gilded day,
Was called a "tenement."

Jack's modest weekly wage was raised
From ten to twelve; whereat
Ambition's tiny spark upblazed—
They moved into a "flat."

Jack soon was marching with the van;
No money cares perplexed.
Ambition blazed still higher. An
"Apartment" housed them next.

But this, in turn, was voted slow,
Not quite the proper sort,
They wanted something better, so
They shifted to a "Court."

Now, one would think that by this time
They'd be content. Somehow
They're not, but still are on the climb.
They live in "Chambers" now.

—Puck.

BRIDGE

She lingered at bridge till midnight,
The clock was striking the hour.
Her husband stayed home with the children
His face was a vision sour.
He was miffed at his wife's ambition
To gather the sordid pelf,
He'd a date at a poker party
And wanted some dough himself.
