SAUNTERINGS

Nothing but the incipient row over the Charity ball has happened during the week to give the bavardes a morsel to nibble on, and from the outlook, nothing is going to happen. It is absurd to even attempt to tell of anything doing in society, for apparently it can't be done, my son, it can't be done.

It is nice to read though, of the wondrous times we are going to have, and hear of the visions certain ones are seeing because there happens to be a guest or two in our midst, but there is positively nothing doing, and with only three months left before Lent, the holidays will probably provide the only diversion for those who crave such excitement as society occasionally provides. To date the season is little more than a joke, just one affair of consequence having taken place since it began.

But about that row over the ball. We are given to understand that it will take place just the same, whether the Associated Charities are in favor of St. Mark's organization running it or not. The ladies mainly interested are planning and working hard, and say that it will be a great success even if they have met with some disappointments at the hands of those in favor of the Charity Association taking charge of it, and using the proceeds for the general fund.

The battle last year resulted in no ball being given, and it was greatly missed by those who like to attend and many others variously interested. There isn't a city that does not have one or more of these functions during the winter, and it will be too bad if the omission of the affair here becomes a habit. There is this much about it, however; lots of those who are loudest in their denunciation of those who argue against it, show no personal interest in the success of the affairs and for that reason in recent seasons, the tone has been considerably lowered.

It is up to those who pose as society leaders to show some signs of life when the time for the function approaches.

The San Francisco News-Letter of last week contains the following interesting note in its society columns:

Mrs. J. Frank Judge writes to friends that she and her husband will shortly leave Salt Lake for New York and plan to return to San Francisco in time to spend the holiday season here, where, as usual, they will be entertained by the Jacklings, as Mr. Judge is associated in business with the copper magnate. The Jackling party is expected home shortly from Alaska, enthusiastic letters of their trip having preceded them.

Mrs. Jackling is said to be in the market for some of the finest of the pictures at the exposition, and there is much speculation about her choice, as the purchases will add to the art collection of San Francisco, and even though privately owned, will be a stimulus, for Mrs. Jackling is the sort who would count it an honor and duty to lend from her collection for exhibitions for
