EDITORIALS BY JUDGE C. C. GOODWIN

TO WILLIAM R. WALLACE

(Respectfully Submitted.)

"When the frost is on the pumpkin"—wrote the Indiana bard;

And the verses made him famous from "The Battery" to "The Mole."

But when the frost is on the "Spinach"—Ah! 'Tis hard, Durice, 'tis hard,

But let's hope he'll be a gamester and will meet the next payroll.

"BLACK MICHAEL" WINS

At the convention of the great unwashed on Wednesday James H. Moyle was named national committeeman from Utah to succeed W. R. (Spinach) Wallace, as national committeeman from Utah.

That Spinach was defeated is almost inconceivable and that the vote was two to one against him came as a great surprise to the few friends of the former state leader in the Democratic ranks, who were sure of a victory in view of the fact that he was backed by a metropolitan journal which, in turn, has been backed by him.

Smilingly confident, he went into the convention with the practical assurance of a substantial majority, according to that paper, the policy of which he controls, if it has a policy, a paper which was singularly silent the day following the convention so far as any editorial expression went regarding the defeat of the plumed knight of the Democracy.

Spinach Wallace brought it on himself. It was a case of the political double crosser being double crossed, and it is very doubtful if the wounds opened anew at the convention will heal in time to make the Democratic vote effective in the coming campaign.

The Democrats have not accomplished much in naming Mr. Moyle as national committeeman. The breadth and popularity of both Mr. Moyle and Mr. Wallace are about on a par, and neither one is of a calibre to unite the bitter factions of their party in the state. In picking either one for a choice, both the rank and file of the party and the leaders who amount to something would probably be asked to be excused. In selecting their new leader the members of the Democratic party in the state have been true to all Democratic traditions and lost the chance to be effective in the election to be held.

In the meantime it will be interesting to see whether Spinach Wallace is big enough to forget his personal animus and work for the good of the party, which in the past has mistakenly honored him. Also, in the meantime, it is to laugh.

PRODUCTS SHOW

It is to be hoped that the housewives of Salt Lake and the visitors in town for conference week are availing themselves of the opportunity knocking at their door in the form of the Utah Products Show.

To be sure, to a number of persons the show is merely the delight of trying one delicious sample after another and when the round of all the booths has been made there is still left the pleasure of starting at the beginning again to see if a second sample is as good as the first.

But for the housewife who wishes to combine knowledge getting with her pleasure when possible, the products exhibition is truly a chance which she can in no other way have, of familiar-
