

The building committee of the Commercial Club is about to be called upon to face a serious problem, and one which will probably prove a task of no mean proportions before a final settlement is effected. Who the selfish member is who suggested the innovation which has met with the approval of so many members has not been discovered, but there is no gainsaying the fact that the numbers in favor of the move are being added to the list so rapidly that the situation is alarming.

It is nothing less than a demand that in connection with the building there shall be a room or rooms where the club members may enjoy themselves without being obliged to entertain the juveniles, ranging in age from two to twelve years, who frequently have almost complete possession of the club at present, and who are anticipating taking possession of the new club building with the elation and vociferation customary with children under the above age limit.

Such an intrusion on the rights of the little ones by the members of the club breaks all precedent, and the question of just how to cope with the situation is bothering the building committee considerably.

Certainly the club wouldn't look like the same old place, nor would it listen like it, without the darlings romping around the billiard and reading rooms and making themselves heard in the salle a manger. The governing board of the club should speedily reprimand the members guilty of such a piece of impertinence.

It is said on fairly good authority that the fascinating Fritzl Scheff is to marry John Fox, Jr., the novelist, and those who know them both are convinced that if the report is true, that it takes stage folk and writers to do just the opposite things expected of them.

No one would pick out either of them for the other, though Fritzl's reply to a San Francisco admirer who sent her congratulations is taken by some to mean that there is nothing in the story, for Fritzl wired back: "A thousand thanks, but I am still Fritzl Scheff."

As the guest of the Lawrence Townsends at a tea at the Country Club, when here, the lady of the figure charmed a lot of new friends, and at least a couple of them were interested enough to go out of their way to entertain her in New York a few weeks later.

The Tom Botterill Automobile company has been trying out the new Chalmers-Detroit car received recently. Several demonstrations of the car have been given and the results have exceeded the expectations of the Botterill company and others who are manifesting an interest in the new car.

The interest of local owners and drivers is centering on the Vanderbilt and Savannah races for October. These will be the two most important events of the late season in the automobile world. However, dozens of other important meets are being announced for the South and West. There is to be a San Francisco-Los Angeles reliability contest, and the Automobile Club of Kansas is planning an eight-day tour. An interesting event in prospect is the proposed match between Louis Strang, winner of the Briarcliff and Savannah races, and Barney Oldfield. It would unquestionably be one of the greatest match races ever held, and is being promoted by the San Antonio, Tex., Automobile Club. The Denver Automobile Club is arranging for a big road race for next month.

Ella—I'm to be married tomorrow, and I'm terribly nervous. Stella—Yes; I suppose there always is a chance of the man getting away up to the last minute.—Philadelphia Inquirer.
