Sir Conan Doyle tells a story. The mother superior of an Irish convent, confusing the name of the famous author with that of Canon Doyle, purchased a copy of Micah Clark, thinking chapters of the story told of fighting and of edification of the convent students. The opening chapters of the story told of fighting and love-making and had an unmistakably worldly tone. The nuns were bewildered, the novices were thrilled, and the good mother, in explanation, said: "The dear Canon is preparing us for a miracle of grace, the merciless coquette and the pagan warrior will be converted as the tale unfolds." But no miracle came to pass and presently some one perceived the mistake. The mother superior was somewhat crestfallen, but, being like everyone else, thoroughly interested in the story, she contrived to find a reason for reading it to the end. "At all events," she said, "the book must be a good one, for I bought it from a pious bookseller. Beside, it would be sinful waste, having paid for the book, not to finish it."

Everyone has his or her favorite days; days which they believe are especially lucky for them. The business man thinks a certain day is always best for him to launch an enterprise or carry out a project. This peculiar superstition or belief holds strong with actors.

Rose Stahl, of "Chorus Lady" fame, is particularly happy when she can play a Wednesday matinee. Possibly this is because her audiences are made up mostly of young girls, who are quick to catch a point and appreciate to a high degree the little deft touches that are so strong in Miss Stahl's art. Robert Edeson enjoys playing Tuesday nights best, while Frank McIntyre, of "The Traveling Salesman," finds his greatest pleasure in playing Saturday nights.

The late Richard Mansfield had Monday night as his favorite, while Madame Nazimova looks forward to Thursday night when she feels she is always at her best. The late Sir Henry Irving welcomed Friday as his lucky night.
