Do you know any place but the Vienna Cafe in this town where you can get a piece of Virginia ham or an order of Jones' sausage—the standards of excellence in great American breakfast dishes?

It is just because we serve such things as these that we meet more people at breakfast than any other cafe, and the same rule applies at lunch, at dinner, and, in fact, during every hour of the twenty-four that the Vienna Cafe is open. The men who know where they can get the one best meal, everything they want when they want it, are the patrons who constitute our best advertisement. We couldn't serve you anything but the best.
