

events planned in her honor—a dinner at the Country Club, at which covers were laid for a dozen.

By order of Colonel Scott, the Officers' club at Fort Douglass has again been opened, much to the delight of the members. Really, it was not through any particular desire on their part that the club was closed, but it seems the colonel thought it advisable to make the order owing to a number of necessary repairs which were badly needed. These have apparently been made.

It is passing strange how much more life has been injected into the proceedings of the Country Club since the arrival of the dainty little debutants who belong here and the many charming guests from east and west who have come to spend a few weeks in Zion.

The appearance of so many strange and good looking faces the last big night at the Club seemed to bring out all of the latent life that has been dormant in the cozy corners since the opening of the season, and everyone, from the girls to the gobblers, seemed to get into the game with renewed vigor.

Why, even the two heavyweight bankers were seen shaking hands, and the only signs of worry were upon the faces of Archie Milner and Major Rowan, the former perhaps on account of the possible demise of Mr. Harriman, and the latter probably in the fear that Garcia would not be able to read the message when he got to him.

There are more young girls and fellows than any summer has attracted for years, and with their coming there is always plenty doing in their own set and enough to give the elders an excuse for havings a better time.

F. R. Hale and C. S. McDonald have submitted plans for doubling the present capacity of the Alta Club, the new annex to be built on the east of the present club building, leaving room for a driveway to extend from State street to South Temple on the south and east of the club. A photograph of the proposed improvement, which will cost from sixty to seventy-five thousand dollars, is published herewith. The addition will not only fill a long-felt want of the club, but will also add greatly to the beauty of the street. The work on the building will begin soon after the approval of the plans by the committee, and will be rushed to completion at the earliest possible date.

Any number of people will flee from the heat to the country today and most of them will stay until Tuesday morning. The Club, of course, will have its full quota, the resorts will be filled to overflowing and those who stay at home will be obliged to take the kids to the circus in the afternoon, and it would not be surprising if they followed it up by making the acquaintance of "Polly Of The Circus" in the evening.

The tennis tournament at the Country Club during the week has been of absorbing interest for those athletically inclined, and the principal surprise of the series of games has been Miss Lucy Lewis, who has made the leading amateurs and semi-professionals among the women sit up and take particular notice. Of the ladies, her game has been the steadiest of the entire tournament, and while at this writing it is impossible to predict just what success she will have with Miss Williams, there is no doubt that she will give the state champion a very hard run. She has played glendid form in a game which has been unusually steady in view of the paralyzing heat on the courts. If she keeps on as she has started, she will develop into a star before another summer have passed. Her endurance is wonderful and her game is always the same, unless it may be said that it improves a little with each day's work.

Judge Morse will decide this afternoon whether Mrs. Jennie B. Parsons will go to California or not. At present Mrs. Parsons is struggling along on $125 a month and states that this is not enough, as she has remained in the high altitude so long that she needs a change. In other words, it takes $200 to live in a low altitude and $125 a month to live in a high, paradoxically speaking.

The troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Parsons were aired some time ago and it was thought that the incident was closed, but apparently the public is to be regaled with some further information regarding the price of living.

Before her divorce, she was the wife of Mr. C. C. Parsons, who is Samuel Newhouse's chief attorney and one of the best liked men in the west. They have been twice married and twice divorced.

Walker Salsbury was the host at an informal dinner at the Country Club on Thursday evening, which was the feature event of the day at that popular resort. The news reached town too late for details.

What do you know about the strike of the waitresses at the Country club on Wednesday? Simply because the four of them did not care to serve some ninety old ladies with luncheon provided on that day each week. It seems preposterous to think that one woman could not serve twenty-two and a half ladies (the proportion to each waitress) with a (course) luncheon such as is usually provided on that day and which is so often taken advantage of by society to pay winter social obligations at half price.

Among the hardships in these valleys of the mountains, a table d'hote luncheon at the Country club probably takes first place, unless the Saturday evening table d'hote dinner might be excepted.

There is no question but that there is something wrong at the club. The service,—or rather the lack of service, is not the fault of those who serve, for it is a physical impossibility to keep up with the demands of the members on crowded days with the present staff in the dining room, kitchen and buffet.

But it is also true that while there have been some very good dinners and luncheons at the club, in the majority of cases, if the men who ate them were served with the same stuff at home, there would be nine hundred and twenty-nine suits for divorce before the summer was over. With a committee, composed of such a personnel as that which constitutes the directorate of the club, every member of which knows the requirements of the members and the means of meeting them, there is positively no excuse for the present conditions. It's a hard game to run a Country club, and it is not to be expected that everything will be perfect; but there is enough room for improvement in the present instance to make it worth while for somebody to take the matter in hand.

For Mrs. Sarah Boggs of Pittsburg, Mrs. A. C. Ewing gave a luncheon on Friday.
