"The Newer Substitutes"

much of this may be due to himself and how much to lack of plant and equipment cannot be said, but it is certain that neither he nor any other superintendent can conduct a smelter with entire success without the support of intelligent and competent management.

Men of knowledge and experience declare that the Tintic smelter possesses natural advantages which should make it a most profitable concern. More than one expert has declared privately that "Uncle Jesse" should realize that the time has come when he ought to redeem his promise to build and operate a smelter; that he must sever family ties and place in charge at Tintic a competent manager with free hand, unhampered by relatives and dependents, and provide him with money to reconstruct such portions of the plant as may be necessary. When he does this Tintic smelter "shut downs" will be things of the past and incoming profits will replace the stream of money which now flows into it as the price of incompetency.

Turning to a brighter theme, we find that Grand Central has failed to justify the pessimistic prophecies of the bear operators and succeeded magnificently in redeeming the promise made by the 2,000 foot level. The exposure of the same ore body on the 2,100 level not only proves that the ledge contains rich vein matter 100 feet vertically, but virtually demonstrates that the south extension of the Centennial-Eureka's system of fissures has been found at last.

Hell would be hell no longer if we gave the devil his dew.

At least it may be said of the kicker that his tendencies are elevating.

One of the eternal mysteries is why we call a black man a colored man and a black eye a discolored optic.

A Californian has been robbed of $1,000 in Philadelphia and the Quaker city police are doing somnambulistic stunts.

Annie Birdsong has been pardoned from the Mississippi penitentiary; briefly stated, the release of a jailbirdsong.

Stories of the maltreatment of Spanish prisoners by the Moors burden the wires. It's no joke—this being bound in Morocco.

A French poet refers to absinthe as "the green fairy." The fairies that drink it, however, can hardly be considered as in any wise verdant.

Texans have been seeing a bright comet shed meteors. Certain kinds of glass are peculiarly fitted for certain kinds of astronomical discoveries.

"Oh, wad some pow'r the giffie gie us
Tae see oursel's as ithers see us."

Astonished at the sight to greet us,
We'd seek an oculist to treat us.

The London Daily Mail predicts that spun glass will take the place of human hair in the manufacture of wigs. It will be funny to hear the bald man of the future remark that he intends to buy a skylight.

An English physician speaks with enthusiasm of pythons as pets, and says that they are perfectly harmless. But for our part, give us something pretty like the horned toad or the Gila monster, or something useful like the coyote or the sachel kitty.
