NEW CITY DIRECTORY ESTIMATES POPULATION AT 116,000.

The new directory of Salt Lake City and its suburbs, issued by Polk & Company, is off the press and ready for distribution, containing fifty-eight thousand one hundred and fifteen names by actual count. Using the multiple two, the lowest used by any directory publisher in the United States, the present population of Salt Lake City and its suburbs is estimated at one hundred sixteen thousand two hundred and thirty. The figures are flattering to the city, and show its rapid growth in the population during the past few months. The first directory issued by the Polk Company in Salt Lake was that of 1897, showing a population of seventy-four thousand, four hundred and twelve. The count of fifty-eight thousand, one hundred and fifteen names in this year's directory does not include the names of firms or corporations, removals or death notices. The suburbs listed in the book include Fort Douglas, Murray, Sandy, West Jordan and Garfield. The directory as a whole is splendidly gotten up, and contains much valuable information in addition to the directory proper. Each department has been carefully prepared, and the book is a credit to the firm, and to the local manager, W. P. Cooper.

Sillicus—Yes; she has threatened to make things unpleasant for him. Cynicus—Is that so? When are they going to be married?—Philadelphia Record.

Friend—Does the baron, your son-in-law, speak with much of an accent? Rickpurse—He did when he discovered how I had fixed his wife's dower.—Puck.

"Who's that homely girl you spoke to?" "Sir, that lady has promised to be my wife!" "Cheer up. Lots of women don't keep their promises."—Cleveland Leader.

Uncle Ellery—Now, I'll learn ye to milk the cow. Nephew from the City—Oh, unkie, I'm kinder 'fraid o' the cow; couldn't I just as well learn on the calf?—Life.

Curch—In the future the man with the a'r-ships will take nobody's dust. Gotham—Won't he? You just try to hire one, and you'll find out!—Yonker's Statesman.

DON'T BE AFRAID.

Don't get it into your head that during the coming week or two, when the big crowds are here, that we can't accommodate our many friends at luncheon, dinner or after the theatre, giving them the same excellent service for which this cafe is noted from one end of the country to the other.

We have in every way anticipated the demands that will be made upon us, and have secured a double crew in every department for day and night in order to serve our customers in the same way that we do when no unusual events are transpiring locally.

We also wish to call attention to the fact that our menus will be just as complete each day, in spite of the rush, as at any other time of the year, and all the delicacies of the season will be provided, together with our new imported beers and anything else anyone wants to drink.

Patriotic music, appropriate to the occasion of the coming of the veterans, will be one of the many features of the day and evening musical programs.
