Latest Bulletins from the Executive Mansion.

THE WORLD'S SYMPATHY.

Washington, 2.—Sir Edward Thornton and Mrs. Victor Drummond called upon the secretary of state, who was in attendance upon the President at the Executive Mansion between 4 and 5 o'clock, and delivered to him a copy of the following dispatch, with many expressions of deep sorrow at the great tragedy:

London, July 2d, 5 p.m.

Thornon, Washington: Is it true that President Garfield has been shot? If so, express at once the great concern of her majesty's government, and our hope that the report that he has sustained serious injury is not true.

(Signed) EARL GRANVILLE, Foreign Office, London.

The following was received at 8 p.m.: Blaine, Secretary, Washington: Telegram received. Express to Mrs. Garfield the profound sympathy of this legation. The Queen has sent to inquire and express solicitude.

(Signed) LOWELL, Minister, New York, 2.

Blaine, Secretary of State, Washington: Your 6.45 telegram is very depressing. I still hope for more favorable tidings, and ask you to keep me advised. Please do not fail to express to Mrs. Garfield my great sympathy.

(Signed) C. A. ARTHUR, Governor's Island, 2.

To Gen. W. T. Sherman, Washington: I trust that the result of the assault upon the life of the President to-day, will not have a fatal consequence, and that in the interest of the country the act may be shown to have been that of a madman. Thanks for your dispatch and for your promise of further information.

(Signed) W. S. HANCOCK.

The following dispatch has been received by Secretary Lincoln, from Gen. Grant.

Elbevon, N. J. To Secretary Lincoln, Washington: Please dispatch me the condition of the President. The news received conflicts. I hope the most favorable may be confirmed. Express to the President my deep sympathy, and hope that he may speedily recover.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

The secretary of State received from Sir Edward Thornton, British ambassador, the following telegram, dated London 10.15 p.m.

To Sir Edward Thornton, British ambassador, Washington: The Queen desires that you will at once express the sorrow with which she has learned of the attempt upon the President's life, and her earnest hopes for his recovery. Her majesty wishes for full and immediate reports as to his condition.

(Signed) LORD GRANVILLE.

Postmaster-General James has just sent the following telegram to New York: "Secretary Blaine has just called foreign ministers at this hour (10.15 p.m.); the President's condition has improved. In the judgment of attending physicians the change is marked and hopeful."

Washington, 2.

THE CRIME.

This morning witnessed a crime unparalleled in the history of the country. The assassination of Lincoln, coming as it did at the close of a long and desperate war, and the last expiring throbs of that struggle of fierce hate and passion, was an infinitely more logical event than this horror. A dumb horror seemed to have taken possession of everybody, and few seem to realize the present situation, much less forecast the future. A great crowd gathered almost instantly around the Baltimore and Potomac depot, in which the President was shot. A hundred different and conflicting stories of the manner of the shooting and of its effect, spread like wildfire throughout the city. By common consent business was suspended in the shops and stores as well as in the public offices, and the population of Washington emptied itself into the streets and gathered at every corner to listen to the details of the tragedy. The President and Mr. Blaine rode to the depot this morning in a carriage together. Mr. Blaine says that President Garfield, was in an unusually joyous mood and several times expressed his keen gratifications that the relations between himself and the members of the cabinet were so harmonious, and that the Administration was a unit. When the carriage arrived in front of the depot, the President and Mr. Blaine left it, and entered the ladies' waiting room, through which they passed arm in arm. Mr. Blaine says he dropped the President's arm as they were passing through the door into the main room, at which instant two shots were fired. Mr. Blaine saw a man running and started to ward him, but turned almost immediately and saw that the President had fallen. It was then that he first realized that the shots had been fired at the President. He sprang towards him, and as he did so several others, and raised his head from the floor. As the President fell he exclaimed "My God!" At this time the Postmaster-General James, Secretary Windom and Secretary Lincoln, who had arrived earlier than the time, were promeneading on the platform outside. General James says that Col. Jameson, of the postoffice department, rushed out of the depot immediately after the shots were fired, and exclaimed, "The President is shot." Either the secretary or another gentleman of the party exclaimed, "Oh, nonsense! Col. Jameson, I saw it!" The party then rushed back, and found Secretary Blaine, who appeared to be the only cool man in the crowd, bending over the President and keeping the people back. Physicians were hastily summoned and Drs. Bliss, Ryburn, and several others were soon in attendance. The President was removed to a room in the second story, and a preliminary examination of his wound was made, but the ball, which had entered the right side of his back, near the spinal column and immediately over the hip bone, could not be found, although its course was traced for about three inches, it having passed forward and downward. As soon as he had fired the shots the assassin was seized by Officer Kearney, and immediately hurried away to the police headquarters. This was fortunate for him for as soon as the crowd gathered a certain that the murderer was in custody there was talk of lynching him, and if the excited crowd could have laid hands on him his fate would have been a sudden and tragic one. About 10 a.m. the President was borne through the depot building to an ambulance in waiting on the outside. The ambulance was surrounded by police and driven rapidly to the Executive Mansion. An excited crowd formed at once, but at the White House the crowd was stopped and none but a select few admitted. The gates of the Executive Grounds were immediately closed, and guarded by soldiers and policemen, and nobody was admitted without a pass from the President's private secretary; and members of the cabinet who were at the depot when the shooting occurred, were immediately summoned, and other members of the cabinet, then at their desks in the departments, were notified and came at once to the White House. All of them remained in attendance during the day and night. Soon after the President's removal to the White House, he appeared to rally and several encouraging dispatches were sent out. From noon the symptoms grew unfavorable, and hourly bulletins to that effect were sent out. As the day wore on the President's symptoms grew less favorable; his pulse gradually accelerated, until at 7 p.m. it stood at 140. At this hour the attending physicians could find no hope for his recovery. Dr. Ryburn said: "We here not been able to find the ball, and the President's condition is such that we cannot trace his wound. The course of the bullet has been traced about three inches and there still there has been considerable internal bleeding, which still continues. Our only hope is that this bleeding will cease of itself. Human skill can do nothing unless that takes place. He is calm and cheerful, and his secretary, Robert Lincoln, paced the room of the President's library with a downward air, evidently realizing the gravity of the sad tragedy which befell him, a father and the nation of a President. Postmaster-General James appeared more disturbed than any other member of the cabinet present, and he could only, with great difficulty, control his emotions when he attempted to speak of the impending calamity. Other members of the cabinet conversed at intervals in low tones and every movement in the inner room, where the dying President lay, was listened to with eager anxiety.

CONKLING AND ARTHUR.

New York, 5.—The Post: There was a gathering of politicians around Conkling and Arthur this afternoon as they walked together to the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Conkling ran briskly across the hall, avoiding reporters, and bounded up the stairs two steps at a time. The Vice-President tried to be cool but was evidently much excited by the news. He said he certainly hoped Blaine's report that the wound wouldn't be fatal was true. It's a most shocking event, and has so staggered me that I don't know what to think.

Will you go to Washington at once? No, sir. That is not my intention but I do not care to talk about the matter at present.

If the wound should result fatally, I suppose you will at once go to Washington? I can't say, I do not wish to be quoted as discussing the matter.

FOREIGN ANXIETY.

Washington, 3.—The following cable message was received, this morning, by the British minister: Windor Castle, July 3.

The Queen is most anxious to learn as to the state of the President. Please wire the latest news.

(Signed) SIR H. PENSONBY, The secretary of state has just received the following from the governor-general of Canada: Amberst, N. S., 2.

Pray express my warmest sympathy with the President and his family at the dastardly attempt on his life. I am shocked at the news, but trust the wound is not mortal. Shall be very glad of further intelligence. Reply to Halifax.

(Signed) LOREN, Governor-General.

THE BULLET.

Dr. Bliss states, this morning, that examinations made yesterday afternoon and evening disclosed the fact that the bullet entered the President's body between the tenth and eleventh ribs on the right side of the spinal column, and passing forward and downward into and through the lower end right lobe of the liver, finally lodged in the anterior portion of the abdomen.

PARALLEL CASES.

Considerable encouragement was derived, to-night, by friends of the President, by the statement made by Chief Brooks, of the secret service division of the treasury department, in which he related the details of the shooting of Jim Fiske, Jr., and himself. In both instances, Brooks says, the bullet entered in identically the same place as did the ball in the body of President Garfield to-day. Probing for the ball in Fiske's case, Brooks says, was undoubtedly the cause of his death. In his own case, he said there was no attempt made to probe the wound, and he carries the ball to-day, but is in perfect health. Brooks received his wound to-day, which originated in the south.

THE BRAVE WIFE.

As the hour approached at which the Garfield was expected to arrive, a few full crowd gathered on the porch of the White House to receive her. A few minutes before 7 o'clock the arrival was met at the front door by Atmaster-General MacVesagh, Mrs. Post, eldest General James and Mrs. Garfield, but her son placed his arm about her, and led her into the house, and scene strong man who witnessed this, as they heard the heart-broken sobs of the President's wife. Mrs. Garfield's husband, who quitted her bedside affectionate cheerfulness. The scene absence of Mrs. Garfield seemed to cheer her conditions and the favorable turn in her arrival observed within an hour a physician to that was attributed by the press, which had been for some time at a 40 112. At 9.40 128, and soon afterwards stopping quietly, he was reported to be considerably encouraged, although it is considered that their heads and main body the opinion that the case was hopeless. The President asked Dr. Bliss to sign the truth regarding his condition. The doctor said: "I consider you on a very critical day, that you have one case in a hundred."

Well, replied the President, cheerfully and bravely, then will take that chance. In the country of the day the President spoke a number of times in a wondering way regarding the motives of his assassin. To Secretary Lincoln he said more than once: "Why what could that man want to shoot me, or?" This is the problem which has puzzled thousands of people in Washington to-day.

THE ASSASSIN'S SUGGESTIONS.

District Attorney Corkhill, after consultation with several judges of the district court, concluded not to make public at present the contents of the papers which Guitauau left for Mr. Andrews, the newspaper correspondent. A member of the cabinet who has read these papers says that one of them is a letter addressed to Vice-President Arthur, in which he recommends the appointment of Mr. Conkling as secretary of state, Mr. L. D. Morton as secretary of the treasury, Gen. Logan as secretary of war, and Emory Stoops as attorney-general. He thought Gen. James might be retained as postmaster general. The member of the cabinet who read these letters said they appeared to be the vapors of an insane mind. Others who have read them think they are more wicked than these.

Blaine cables to Lowell a request that he think the Queen for the President and Mrs. Garfield for her repeated expressions of sympathy and interest.

Evarts, Thurman, Howe and Horton, cable Secretary Blaine from Paris: "Our countrymen receive successive accounts of the President's condition with profound sorrow and deepest sympathy, with the public and private affliction. We receive expressions of condolence and honor at the crime from representatives of other nations. We still cherish hopes for a favorable issue, and desire to express our heartfelt sympathy in the grief that surrounds the President."

Minister Lowell cables Blaine the following from the Queen: "I am most anxious to hear the latest accounts of the President, and wish that my horror and deep sympathy be conveyed to him and Mrs. Garfield."

Collector Robertson telegraphs assurances of deepest sympathy and that fervent prayers will go up to-day from every church and loyal heart in the land that the President may be spared.

The minister from Spain, Mr. Borco, called upon Secretary Blaine, at the Executive Mansion, this afternoon, for the purpose of delivering a copy of the following telegram from the minister of state at Madrid:

Madrid, July 3.

In the name of the King, express to the government of the United States, the profound sorrow that the attempt against the President's life has caused in Spain. His Majesty and government fervently hope for the recovery of President Garfield.

The following was received this evening by the secretary of state: Lisbon, 3.

Am horrified by the attempt upon the President's life. Await intelligence with anxiety. (Signed) MAROON.

When the cabinet learned from physicians last night that the President was sinking they requested Arthur to come on the midnight train, which he did. He suppressed his natural desire to express sympathy with the President and family because it was necessary for the President absolutely quiet for the present.

SUNSHINE BEFORE THE STORE.

Washington, 3.—Inside the White House, after 6 p.m. yesterday, every formality was waived. In one window sat Blaine, Kirkwood, Tucker and the Portuguese minister. Blaine related how he had called in a carriage to take the President to the depot. The President
