The Opera House was crowded last night and the program was the best that could possibly be offered the people. The vaudeville part of the program was first class and the pictures were simply grand. Tonight the management promises a change of vaudeville and an entire change of pictures. Those who wish to pass an enjoyable evening can do so by attending the performance at the Opera House tonight. John Hanson and Josephine Bonnet will be there with a new sketch. The wooden shoe dancers will also delight the audience once more. In fact everything put on will be of the first order.

Brockett was elected vice president, to succeed Mr. Johnson. Mr. J. T. Preston, the secretary and treasurer and all other officers were re-elected.

ALARM OF FIRE.

The alarm of fire late yesterday evening was caused by a slight blaze in a house near the southwest corner of Queen and Patrick streets. A rack on which clothes had been placed was standing near a hot stove when a dog in running into the room overturned the rack. It fell on the stove and ignited the garments. The flames were soon extinguished by neighbors who rushed into the house.

ELITE PICTURE CO.

The Elite Picture Company gave its patrons a big show last night and although the weather was not the best the house was crowded. THE SUB-STATION.

The southwest Washington railroad substation site problem has been settled. The structure will be located at the southeast corner of Maryland avenue and Seventh street. Thus the final chapter has been written to a controversy which divided the board of District Commissioners, which sent the Pennsylvania Railroad to the courts to annul an order of the commissioners, and which has been the source of much vexatious delay for thousands of commuters from Virginia. The site problem has been decided in favor of Commissioners Macfarland and West, as against former Commissioner Morrow and the Pennsylvania Railroad. The end of the dispute is all the more significant in that it came on the initiative of the railroad company. The Pennsylvania Railroad recently won a decision which apparently gave them the right to build on Fourteenth street. It was at this juncture that the Southern Railway placed an entirely new aspect upon the long drawn-out controversy. "We have the most at stake," said the Southern. "The Pennsylvania does not have a single passenger train stopping in the southwest section. We carry thousands of suburbanites into Washington from Virginia. There is no doubt that a Seventh street station will be vastly more convenient for them and far easier for us. Seventh street is the natural radiating point for the outside traffic." The Southern won its point, and the plans were informally sketched out yesterday, after they were approved by Commissioner West and Engineer Commissioner Cooby. The plans provide for a long narrow, elevated platform, level with the railroad tracks, running along Maryland avenue, and a stairway and a subway tunnel leading to a commodious waiting room in Seventh street. There is a general similarity between this plan and that of the transfer station of the subway and elevated roads in New York. All crossing of tracks is eliminated. A waiting room is provided at the ground level, with protection from the soot and cinders of passing trains, especially freight trains.
