Men Arrested For Assaulting Brambleton Sewer Laborers, Released as Result of Agreement Made With Colored Union.

The six negroes who were arrested for rioting Wednesday afternoon in connection with the Brambleton sewer trouble, were arraigned before Justice Tomlin yesterday morning. The case was partially gone into, some of the evidence being heard, but before it was concluded an agreement was reached between the prosecuting attorneys, Messrs. Wolcott & Wolcott, and a committee representing the negro union (the Labor Protective Association), whereby the former dropped the prosecution and asked the judge to dismiss the offenders, which he did with a reprimand.

THE AGREEMENT MADE. A committee of three of the officials of the Labor Protective Association, with their legal counsel, Mr. Ross, of Ross & Lambeth, called on Messrs. Wolcott & Wolcott and proposed that if the cases against the members of the union were dismissed they would enter into a written contract to have the union use its influence against any violence of any kind on the part of its members, and help prosecute any member who disobeyed its advice.
