ALEXANDRIA:
WEDNESDAY MORNING, JANUARY 26, 1835

Our readers have, in the past quarter, seen the effect of the freezing and thawing weather upon the state of the roads, and the consequent necessity for the men who are employed on them, to build themselves a shelter of some kind. As a consequence of this, there has been a great increase in the number of wig-stands and other similar structures, which may be seen all over the city. The weather has also been so severe that the roads are now in a very bad state, and it is expected that they will continue so for some time to come. The roads are now in such a state that it is impossible for the men who are employed on them to continue their work, and they are therefore obliged to seek other employment.

The weather has also been so severe that the roads are now in a very bad state, and it is expected that they will continue so for some time to come. The roads are now in such a state that it is impossible for the men who are employed on them to continue their work, and they are therefore obliged to seek other employment.

A popular cry of the day is: "Let us have a change!" The people are tired of the same old system, and they are clamoring for a change. They want something new, and they want it now. They want a new government, a new constitution, a new everything. They want to get rid of the old and start afresh. They want to get rid of the old and start afresh.

The weather has also been so severe that the roads are now in a very bad state, and it is expected that they will continue so for some time to come. The roads are now in such a state that it is impossible for the men who are employed on them to continue their work, and they are therefore obliged to seek other employment.

A popular cry of the day is: "Let us have a change!" The people are tired of the same old system, and they are clamoring for a change. They want something new, and they want it now. They want a new government, a new constitution, a new everything. They want to get rid of the old and start afresh. They want to get rid of the old and start afresh.