FARM & GARDEN THE CORN HARVEST.

How to Rig Up a Cutter Which Does Very Effective Work on the Average Farm Field. Any ingenious farmer can rig up a sled with knives set oblique to the runners, so that when drawn between rows of corn the cutting may be done with horse power. This plan is far better than the old hand cutter, but not up to the patented corn cutters, each of which do the work of 15 men.

Runners (a) are 5 feet of 2 by 12-inch plank. Width of sled 2 feet 10 inches. Knives (b) are 28 inches long, made of blades of an old stalk cutter, very sharp, slant slightly upward to make a slanting cut; their front end is fastened firmly to the sled by a wood screw; the back end, 18 inches from the sled, is bolted to a hardwood 2 by 4 crosspiece (c) 5 feet 10 inches long. It extends clear across the sled and is spiked on. The seat (d) is 2 1/2 feet long, 1 1/2 high, and spiked on. The space (e) between the knives and sled is filled with a 2-inch piece made to fit, and is fastened securely. The spring contrivance (f) for holding the strings to tie the bunches or gallow hills is just back of the seat. Mine is made from a spring from an old steel trap; when in place it is upside down from what it was on the trap. A long spike with a flattened head is driven down through the holes. The spike when flattened looks like the letter T which is turned crosswise of the hole in the spring so as to hold it down. The strings are then put under the under side of the spring, which holds them firmly; at the other end they are held in place by a wire driven in the sled and bent over them. The strings never loose or become tangled. The draw rope (g) should be fastened on the outside of runners so as not to catch stalks. Lines (h) are sometimes, but not always used. Muzzle the horse.

Let shocks ten hills square. When starting in I cut the two gallow hills first and drive a hill past where the shock is to be, and stop. As I get off the sled I hold my corn in one arm and pull a twine string 3 feet long from the spring back of the seat. I set up bunches together; father reaches around and squeezes it up together while I tie it; then we each take half of our bunch by the butts and set them out to the hills so they will stand, and get on the sled and go again till we get the gallow hills row cut clear through the field; that leaves four rows on each side to cut. Turn around and take two rows back, and so on; when we get even with each shock we stop the horse, get off and set up our bunches and go on again.

With a little practice one can set up the corn so it will stand for weeks without being tied. We had some that stood all last winter that way. We let them stand from one to three days to wilt, then draw them tight about two feet from the top and tie with binder twine wound on a spool that holds enough for 80 shocks. I think this binder and not so apt to tangle; the shocks will stand.—J. T. Hubbard, in Farm and Home.

TWO FARM MANAGERS.

A Bona Fide Case from Which Scores of Land Owners Can Draw a Valuable Lesson.

The following case illustrates the difference between good and bad management on the same place: A farm contained about 800 acres. The manager was a good local farm foreman. He carried about 30 brood sows to produce pigs to be sold as "roasters" in the city. The sows lived in close confinement, became uneasy, ate their pigs and there were no sales. Hay was grown in connection with some corn, oats and potatoes. The manager worked at anything and everything, while his men loped along to eat themselves. This management continued for three or four years; then an energetic superintendent took hold. He released the brood sows, cut down the feed and got them into a healthy condition; purchased a lot of sheep for early lambs, raised a quantity of roots for the sheep and horses, potatoes in quantities for early market, and made other changes of importance. The first manager received $40 per month and found, and went behind $3,000 to $4,000 a year; the new manager received $1,000 per annum and found, and made the place self-supporting. Both men were honest, faithful and industrious, but fitted for different positions.—Troy (N. Y.) Times.

Tarred Felt for Roofs.

Although tarred paper roofs are preferred for winter, yet they can be put on to advantage during the summer. They make the cheapest and best roofs. If the work is well done. Fasten the felt (paper) in places and paint it with coal tar, using the tar hot, and throw enough sand on it to prevent the coal tar from running off. In three months thereafter give another coating of tar and sand, and then a coating once a year. Such a roof will last a lifetime.—Farm and Fireside.
