TUSKEGEE'S GREAT GIFT.

What Mr. Carnegie's $600,000 Will Do For the Negro Institute.

When asked as to the effect the great Carnegie gift of $600,000 to the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute would have upon the finances of the institution Mr. William H. Baldwin, Jr., treasurer of the Tuskegee endowment funds, said the other day, according to a special dispatch from Richmond, Va., to the New York Post:

"The great physical growth in Tuskegee Institute during the last few years has brought with it large financial responsibilities, and the task of securing the necessary annual income of $150,000 from individuals has been difficult and very exhausting to Principal Washington. The endowment fund will now yield an income of about $40,000, and this income, together with about $30,000 from regular contributors, will leave about $80,000 to be collected from the public at large. Provision for the support of Mr. Washington's family will relieve him of great anxiety, because from his absolute self denial he has been unable to make any provision for them.

"During the present period of growth the institution needs fully $150,000 a year. Outside of kindergartens there are 1,418 students whose training has to be provided for. All the managers of Tuskegee at Richmond, Va., are anxious that the public should not be misled as to the exact help the Carnegie gift will be to those striving to meet Tuskegee's financial needs."
