The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending Saturday was copies, the largest paid circulation of any daily paper in this section.

2,609

One might think from the figures of Barre's tax rate, $2.80, that it is a marked down sale that the city is offering.

Re-Mark-able Hanna of Ohio has now withdrawn his objection to the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for the presidency. The cloud was scarcely black enough at any rate to darken Roosevelt's political horizon.

The Rutland News pays a deserved tribute to a captain in the Rutland fire department who met a tragic death Tuesday evening, as follows: "There is no greater hero, either in war or peace, than the firefighter who dies in the performance of his duty. All honor, then, to John F. Corey whose life was crushed out while hastening to answer the alarm."

"You cannot always judge heroic characters by the cut of the man's clothes," said Rev. Mr. Barr, a Presbyterian clergyman of Quincy, Mass., and he spoke a world of truth in that sentence. The connection of the train was with a sermon delivered by him last Sunday, the subject being "Heroes of Toll."

The fact that a banking house which bought last year's issue of Barre city water bonds at a good premium and is now trying to dispose of them at par, is nothing against the bonds or the city's credit. Money rates are higher this year than last and bonds that were saleable at a good premium last year cannot find a market this. Like everything else, money costs more this year than last, and the brokers could afford to make a discount to sell the Barre bonds and then place it where it could bring a much higher rate.

The Times is pleased to note the following Hyde Park item in the Morrisville News and Citizen: "The recent arrest of a few men for drunkenness is all right; but there should be no discrimination whatever. The law should be meted out alike to all, and every person who gets under the influence of rum and makes himself obnoxious and disgraceful should be brought to time." It certainly shows the right attitude to take in relation to offenses of intoxication. If any arrests are to be made for intoxication there most certainly should be no discrimination on account of money or social or business position. A man who abuses his privilege and lowers himself enough to become intoxicated should have the same treatment that is accorded all persons who are brought into court on that charge. There is apt to be discrimination made in every town. The sentiment expressed in the Morrisville contemporary is the correct one.

If any incident of the many that are constantly happening at the state asylum for the insane deserves investigation, this most recent one, in which a patient received a fracture of three ribs, needs such an investigation. To be sure the consequences of the incident were not so serious as in the case of Mrs. Bennett who died from the injuries received in being scalded, but there was much less of the accidental in this breaking of the bones of an insane patient, such as happened Tuesday. If those who raised a cry for an investigation some weeks ago were to raise the same demand now there would be fully as much justification, in the opinion of the Times. In the former case it was established beyond peradventure that the causes leading up to the death of Mrs. Bennett were purely accidental. In this latest case it is not so certain. Here is a patient who tried to escape from the institution, a man of rather small size and weighing only 140 pounds. It was further stated that the man, whose name is Flanders, was placed in the excitable ward. Two attendants were with him at the time he tried to escape, and it is supposed that the attendants were of at least as much weight and strength as the patient, yet in order to prevent his escape the attendants threw him to the floor and in the fall one of the attendants landed on the prostrate man hard enough to fracture three ribs. The question arises whether undue violence was not used, contrary to the rules of the institution. There is, it would seem, a chance for an investigation.

ABOUT THE STATE.

Items of Interest Gleaned From Our Exchanges.

Forest fires have burned over 150 acres belonging to L. H. Felton and R. H. Brown in the western part of Franklin county.

A two-story house on Pine street, Newport, owned by F. H. Morris, was burned yesterday. It was occupied by three families. The furniture was saved. The fire was caused by children playing with an oil stove.

The Second Congregational church at Hartford, one of the oldest churches in that town and originally a town church, was rededicated Tuesday evening in the presence of a large congregation.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilman Richardson celebrated the 50th anniversary of their marriage at the home of Calvin W. Richardson of Worcester, May 19. Many friends and relatives were present. A sum of money and many valuable articles were presented to the aged couple. The Rev. J. W. Halsey made the presentation speech.

The listers' returns of Hyde Park show the amount of first class property in that town to be $161,075, second class, $250,729, personal, $220,284, polls, $370, making a total of $715,858. Last year the list was $704,647, making the increase this year $11,211. The number of polls this year is 385 as against 420 of last year. The soldier exemption passed at the last session, makes a large part of the decrease.

Deputy Health Officer C. R. Aldrich of Brattleboro went to Halifax yesterday to quarantine a case of smallpox in the family of Winfield Houghton, Mr. Houghton's twelve year old daughter being the patient. The girl thought she had typhoid poisoning and went to a Brattleboro drug store for a remedy. The druggist saw that the eruption was more serious than typhoid poisoning and called Deputy Aldrich and Dr. H. D. Holton of the state board of health, both of whom diagnosed the case as smallpox. There were not many exposures.

As an illustration of the duration of the present drouth, C. B. Hill of Richford tells the following: Early in the spring a pair of robins started a nest in the piazza eaves trough near the conductor. Mr. Hill remarked that the robins would get drowned but the nest was finished, the eggs laid and hatched and the young ones reared until they are nearly ready to fly, and there has not been enough rain at any time to fill the eaves trough behind the nest. Did the robins know by a keener instinct than our own that this was a safe season to build a nest in such a situation?

Lipton's Fleet Leaves Greenock.
 Greenock, May 28.—Sir Thomas Lipton's fleet has left Greenock for Gourock preparatory to sailing for America. Large crowds of people gathered to bid the crews farewell, and good wishes were signaled from the ships in the harbor.

Russia Making History.
 When the great bear sits him down his history to write,
 When he takes a newer page to chronicle his might,
 We must stand and look at him, afar and stricken dumb,
 While we read with startled eyes the pages as they come.
 He must spread a massive leaf, a jagged long one, because
 He must write his history with blood upon his paws.

He must dip his ink afresh from little children's hearts.
 When to make a chapter in his history he starts;
 He must make it redder yet with woman's tortured blush;
 All the blood of innocence he dips with brutal rush.
 Dips it on his reeking paws and blotches it and bleeds.
 It upon the dripping page that shall last through the years.
 Sword and fire and bludgeon, too, he uses one and all.
 For the margin of each page must startle and appal.
 Must have delicate designs devised by some weird fiend,
 Dainty ornaments in blood from babies yet unweaned,
 But the living history he sets down with his paws.
 Soaked and drenched and dropping gore from hair and skin and claws.

When the great bear sits him down his history to write,
 All the field that makes his page is blacker than the night;
 All the world without his land looks on and hears the moans,
 Hears the prayers and the shrieks that die in stifled tones.
 This the page the great bear writes and spreads for me and you;
 This the page he writes in blood, and God he reads it too!
 —Chicago Tribune.
