STORY OF MAX O'RELL.

Experience of French Author When Locked Out of His London Home.

In a letter to the Chicago News Eugene Field once wrote that when he first came to London the late Paul Blouet (Max O'Rell) took a little house in a retired quarter of the city. About 2 o'clock one morning the whole neighborhood was aroused by cries in the street; somebody was shouting at the top of his voice: "Murder! Fire! Thieves!" and this hubbub was protracted until everybody in the locality was at his window in a state of violent alarm. It was Max O'Rell, who, returning home at this unholy hour and finding himself locked out, took this way of arousing his servants. Finally, standing in the middle of the street the cynosure of all eyes, O'Rell lifted his hat and, bowing politely this way and that, said: "Thanks, good neighbors, for your friendly solicitude; having awakened the concierge, I will now enter my home."

Who but a Frenchman could have done that thing in just that way?
