PHONOGRAPH IN BIG DRUM.

Salvation Army's Novel Idea For Its Open Air Meetings.

The Salvation Army workers have adopted a novel departure in the forms of entertainment for attracting people in the open air, says a special dispatch from Springfield, Mass., to the New York Evening Journal.

Stirring strains of sacred songs and various selections of instrumental music produced through the medium of an improved phonograph located inside what resembles a big bass drum is their idea. The diameter of the drum is forty inches. It is set on a rubber tired carriage that can be moved easily. The phonograph arrangement placed in the inside is built under the same patents as are those used in the regular form of street music boxes.

It is the plan of the Salvation Army people to use records which will reproduce the hymns familiar to everyone and also some of the sacred songs as sung by the well known vocalists. A considerable number of the new street drums will be used by the army in England.

Chicago's New Journals.

The University of Chicago is about to add two new periodicals to its publication department. One is modern philology, dealing with modern languages and literature. The other is a Journal of Infectious Diseases, edited by Professor Jorjian and Professor Hektson. The latter journal has a special endowment of $125,000 from Mr. and Mrs. McCormick, whose son died from an infectious disease.
