What If All Advertising Were Eliminated?

In the September Woman's Home Companion appears an interesting editorial on advertising, an extract from which follows: "Can you imagine what existence would be like if all advertising were eliminated?"

"It is hard to mean more than the absence of advertising in the pages of periodicals and newspapers. It would mean that the grocer would not have his name or his business printed over his door or on his window. The drug stores would not display the globes of colored water. The minister would not announce the topic of his next sermon, nor the mid-week meetings, from the pulpit. There wouldn't even be signs-boards at country crossroads, nor on the street corners in towns and cities."

"If you should visit a strange community where there was no advertising whatever, you would realize how absolutely dependent you are upon advertising. If you wanted to go to a store, particularly the best store, no one could direct you, for that is advertising—word-of-mouth advertising, which is sometimes as important and as valuable as any other. Frankly, you would find it practically impossible to live without advertising, although you might manage to exist after a fashion."

"A mere child could tangle us up in about a minute if his insatiable curiosity were directed to advertising. To his first question we could promptly and truthfully reply that a man advertises to make money. But for the next logical inquiry, 'How does he make money by advertising?' the answer isn't so easy. Possibly the childish mind might be satisfied with the explanation that advertising increases the volume of business, which is true, of course; but it is neither comprehensive nor final."
